PREFACE

THE Masai occupy a considerable part of the large plains which extend from about one degree north of the equator to six degrees south of it, situate in both British and German East Africa. Those living in British territory commonly call themselves Il-Maasae¹, whilst the 'German Masai' are to a large extent known as 'L-Oikop'² or Il-Lumbwa³. In olden days the coast people termed them without discrimination Wa-Masái or Wa-Kwayi⁴, names which have been perpetuated by Krapf and others.

Sir H. Johnston states⁵, and probably correctly, that the Masai represent an early mixture between the Nilotic negro and the Hamite (Gala-Somali); and that this blend of peoples must have been isolated somewhere in the high mountains or plateaux which lie between the Nile and the Karamojo country. Certain it is that the Latuka, who are supposed to be descendants of the ancestral Masai, and who occupy this country, speak a language that is closely allied to the Masai tongue, and have many customs in common with the Masai. The accounts which have been published of the habits and

² 'L-Oikop is believed to signify the possessors of the land. It also means murder (see p. 27, note 3, and p. 311).

My endeavour in writing this book has been to place on record some of the thoughts and ideas of the Masai people, before their extinction or their admixture with Bantu elements and contact with civilization renders this an impossibility. The stories, the proverbs, the riddles, the songs, and the account of the customs and beliefs of this interesting people are all given in the words of the relaters themselves.

My thanks are due to Sir C. Eliot for many valuable hints, and for the kindly interest he has shown in my work; to Mr. W. J. Monson for the free translation of the songs and prayers; to Mr. R. J. Stordy and to Saleh bin Ali for the loan of their photographs; and to the Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew, and to the officials of the Agricultural and Forestry Departments, East Africa Protectorate, for determining the names of the trees and plants.

In conclusion I wish to pay a tribute of the highest praise to the work of the Church Missionary Society in East Africa.

¹ When this was written Merker's book Die Masai (Berlin, 1904) had not been published.

Some years ago this body conceived the idea of educating at their central station at Freretown, near Mombasa, a few of the most promising of their up-country converts. When sufficiently advanced, these boys or men are sent back to their homes and become teachers of the Gospel. Thus, one Ol-omeni¹, a member of the Oikop or Lumbwa Masai, who had spent some years under the able tuition of the Rev. A. R. Steggall at Taveta, was baptized under the name of Justin, and completed his education at the coast. He is now one of the principal supports of the Society in Southern Masailand. To the kindness of the Society in lending me Justin Ol-omeni's services, and to the diligence of Justin Ol-omeni himself, I am in a large measure indebted for the material contained in this book. Philologists will possibly be interested to hear that there exist Masai (and possibly members of other tribes whose language has ever been a closed book) who are able to correspond with one another in their mother tongue. I have in my possession, for instance, several letters written in Masai.

As a well-wisher of the Masai and one who has known them for a decade, I consider that every support should be given to the Church Missionary Society and to the other Missions engaged in proselytizing in their midst, for it is only by the gradual and peaceful civilization of the tribe that they can be saved from extinction. The encroachments of civilization are beginning to be felt in East Africa; and the famous Rift Valley and the high plateaux where the fierce, bloodthirsty Masai once reigned supreme, are now becoming colonized by the white settler. It has often been proved in other parts of the globe that the native, on the advent of the white man, alters his habits or ceases to exist, and it is to be hoped that the Masai will choose the first of these alternatives.

INTRODUCTION

THE present work, by Mr. Hollis, Chief Secretary to the Administration of the East Africa Protectorate, treats of the language, traditions, and customs of the Masai, one of the most interesting and important tribes of those territories. I am not competent—and there must be few people in the world who are—to criticize by the light of independent knowledge the mass of material which he has brought together, and will merely attempt briefly to summarize the information about the race which we now possess. Mr. Hollis's previous contributions to anthropology, his opportunities for studying and daily conversing with the Masai, and his linguistic talents, which are well known to every one in East Africa, are a sufficient guarantee for the thoroughness and excellence of his work.

The Masai at present inhabit the inland districts of British and German East Africa from the equator to about 6° S. Few of them are found north of the Line, except an isolated settlement just south of Lake Rudolf, and they seem to avoid both the sea and the great central lakes. Many smaller pieces of water, such as Lakes Naivasha and Nakuru, are found in their haunts, but they neither use boats nor catch fish. They are divided at present into two sections, one of which, called OL-Oikop, is agricultural and settled, while the other, of Masai proper, is entirely pastoral and nomadic. The difference between the two is evidently not ancient, for both speak practically the same language, and it is probable that the agriculturalists of the present time are nomads who have settled down. On the other hand, tradition does not carry the history of the tribe further back than a century at the most¹, and it would be rash to assume that the nomad pastoral state is primitive or very ancient. It is quite probable that there was a large agricultural settlement on the Uasin-Gishu plateau from which the more adventurous warriors detached themselves.

In East Africa the Masai are clearly distinguished by their language, customs, and appearance from the Bantu races (although the latter often imitate them, and have received a certain proportion of Masai blood), and equally clearly related to the Suk-Turkana and Nandi-Lumbwa¹. Somewhat more distantly allied to the same stock are the inhabitants of South Kavirondo or Ja-luo. These races again show clear resemblances to some of the peoples who inhabit the banks of the Southern Nile, such as the Acholi, Bari, Latuka, Dinka, and Shilluk. The whole group are sometimes classed together as Nilotic, and have many peculiarities in common. Their languages show a considerable, though varying, degree of affinity; physically they are tall, thin men, with features which are not markedly negroid, and are sometimes almost Caucasian: several remarkable customs, such as the nudity of the male sex and the habit of resting standing on one leg, are found among them all. The closest connexion seems to be between the Acholi and the Ja-luo, and between the Masai, Latuka, and Bari. The Masai, Nandi, Lumbwa, Suk, and Turkana all possess in a more or less developed form a military organization which obliges all the male population, between the ages of about seventeen and thirty, to submit to a special discipline and constitute a warrior class. A similar organization does not seem to be recorded among the tribes who dwell along the Nile². These latter are not a homogeneous group, so that the word Nilotic must be used with caution. The Madi, who occupy a large portion of the country between Lake Albert and Gondokoro and extend well to the east of the river, are linguistically different from their neighbours, and apparently represent an invasion from the west, though in customs they do not seem to differ markedly from the Bari.

A glance at the map will show that from the Rift Valley to the Nile there runs in a north-westerly direction a broad belt of non-Bantu languages, more or less allied to one another, Masai, Nandi, Suk, Turkana, Karamojo, Latuka, Bari, and Dinka. The Karamojo appear to be Bantus who have been forced to accept an alien form of speech. This distribution of languages seems clearly to suggest a south-eastward movement from the country between the north of Lake Rudolf and the Nile. The hypothesis is rendered more probable by the fact that in East Africa as elsewhere the course of invasions has been mainly from the north to the south. This is certainly the case with the Gallas, Somalis, and Abyssinians (who are rapidly encroaching on the Protectorate), and probably with the Bahima. It also seems probable that the physical type of these races (Masai, Nandi, Turkana, Dinka, &c.) represents a mixture between the negro and some other factor. It does not seem to me possible to make any definite statement as to what that factor may be, but the neighbourhood of Egypt and Abyssinia renders several hypotheses plausible. Baker states that the appearance of the Latuka (who are probably the closest allies of the Masai) points to a Galla origin, and that there are Gallas on the east bank of the river Chol only fifty miles east of Latuka, which they have often invaded. It may therefore be that the Nilotic tribes, and possibly also the Hausas to the west, represent a hybrid of the negro and Galla.

² Baker perhaps alludes to something similar among the Latuka whose young men, he says, live for fighting only.

There is absolutely nothing to show when the Masai moved southwards, but the traditions reported by Mr. Hollis (p. 264, &c.) seem to place the earliest history of the world in an East African setting, and convey no hint of an earlier home. The chief characters in these stories are the Masai, the Dorobo (hunting tribes), and the Bantu (Meek), and the principal event some arrangement by which the Masai obtain a right to all the cattle in the world. This seems to indicate that they must have been a long time in their present haunts, and have lost all remembrance of their origin. Some of the proverbs, such as 'The zebra cannot change his stripes,' and 'Mountain does not meet mountain,' have a familiar oriental ring; but it would be unsafe to speculate how they came to Masailand.

A very different view of the past of the Masai is suggested by Merker's recent work (Die Masai, Berlin, 1904). He regards them as belonging to the same stock as the ancient Hebrews, and quotes a great number of traditions respecting the creation, deluge, ten commandments, &c. which resemble the Biblical and Babylonian versions of primitive history. A critical examination of these stories is very desirable, as one cannot help suspecting that they contain elements borrowed from Christian or Mohammedan sources. On the other hand, in all questions affecting the origin of East African races, our only data are the most recent types of physique, religion, and language, and we cannot, as in the case of more civilized nations, go back two or three thousand years with comparative certainty. We can form no idea of how many strata of population such a period would represent in Africa; what mixtures and disruptions of races it would include.

- A tribe coming from the north like the Masai, and possibly at one time in touch with races influenced by ancient Egypt, may conceivably represent not an improvement of the primaevae African stock but a degeneration of some other race. Still, the accounts which we have of the Bari and Dinka ascribe to them the same vague belief in a supernatural power, which most inquirers have reported as existing among the Masai, and an absence of traditions respecting the origin of the human race¹.

- The history of the Masai, as far as we know it for the last hundred years, presents as its most important feature a conflict between the pastoral and agricultural sections, ending in the victory of the former and the annihilation of large settlements of the latter. The conflict was disastrous for the race, for the portion which survived depended entirely on cattle and raiding for subsistence. The herds suffered severely from plague in the eighties, and the advent of Europeans and the gradual introduction of the Pax Britannica could not be otherwise than unfavourable to the pre-eminence of a tribe whose prosperity depended so largely on continually plundering their neighbours. Nevertheless from at least 1850 to the early eighties the pastoral Masai were a formidable power in East Africa. They successfully asserted themselves against the Arab slave-traders, took tribute from all who passed through their country, and treated other races, whether African or not, with the greatest arrogance. About 1859 they raided Vanga, on the coast near the present German frontier. Thomson (Through Masai Land, 1885) describes how, in 1883, they entered his camp and ordered about the whole caravan, including himself, as if they had been masters and the travellers slaves. This period of triumph was succeeded by one of disaster. Rinderpest attacked the cattle and small-pox human beings. The surrounding tribes who had suffered from their raids were not slow to revenge themselves for the oppression and plunder of the past, and a severe famine completed the catalogue of misfortunes. The numbers of the Masai were undoubtedly greatly reduced, and at present those found in British East Africa only amount to a very modest figure, variously estimated at from 25,000 to 12,500. The latter estimate, which is the latest and perhaps the most correct, is based on the assumption that there are 7,500 in the

Naivasha province and 5,000 between Kikuyu and Kilima-Njaro.

The expansion of the tribe seems to have come to an end about the middle of the last century. About 1830 they reached their furthest recorded point in the south and were driven back by the Wagogo and Wahehe. The southward movements of the Gallas and Somalis kept them back on the north-east, though as late as the nineties they raided on the Tanæ river. It would appear that about 1850 the Turkana drove the most westerly branch of the Masai from the west to the south of Lake Rudolf, where they are now settled. Somewhere about the same period—at the time an old man can remember according to the native expression—the Masai dwelling on the Uasin-Gishu plateau attacked those of Naivasha, and after defeating them were in their turn thoroughly defeated by a combination of Naivasha and allies from Kilima-Njaro. The inhabitants of the Uasin-Gishu were scattered to the four winds: those who escaped their brethren were annihilated by the Nandi, and only a few fragmentary remnants survive in Kavirondo, Lumbwa, and the two villages called Great and Little Enjámusi at the south end of Lake Baringo. Another branch called 'L-Osigella or Segelli took refuge in the Nyando valley but were wiped out by the Nandi and Lumbwa. The Laikipia plateau, which is now uninhabited like the Uasin-Gishu, was not depopulated in 1889, when Peters crossed it and had many fights with the Masai. According to one story, the people of Laikipia raided some other Masai near Nairobi about 1890 and carried off their cattle. These cattle were suffering from rinderpest, and the result was that all the stock of the Laikipia took the disease and died. This was considered as a judgment on the Laikipia for raiding their brethren.

At present the agricultural Masai are found chiefly near Lake Natron and south of Mount Meru in German territory. In our Protectorate they are represented only by a few scattered settlements, such as the people of Enjámusi, the Burkeneji, and perhaps the people of Samburu in the Rendile country. It would appear that the name Wakwavi, often applied to the agriculturalists, is merely a Swahili nickname borrowed from the Masai Kwavi or Kwapi, meaning places. The pastoral section classify themselves under five districts, with many subdivisions, namely Kaputiei (Kapite plains), En-aiposha (Naivasha), Kisongo (the district south and west of Kilima-Njaro), Uasin-Gishu, and 'L-Aikipyak. The two last districts, as mentioned, have ceased to exist, and those who claim to belong to them live elsewhere. Merker gives as the principal divisions three provinces, Kisongo, Loita, and Olbruggo. This is perhaps not according to Masai traditions, but is not incorrect as a practical description of the present distribution of the tribe. The Loita and Olbruggo, also known as Elburgon and Purko, are both subdivisions of the Naivasha district, of whom the former acquired importance by refusing to accept the present Laibon, Lenana, and following instead his brother Sendeyo. Besides these districts, there are four clans representing genealogical not territorial divisions: Aiser, Meñgana, Mokesen, and Molelyan. The Aiser seem to enjoy a certain primacy. The medicine men all belong to this clan, which is specially connected with Mount Ngong (to the south of Kikuyu), also called Ol-doinyo loo'-l-Aiser, the mountain of the Aiser.

According to the social system of the pastoral Masai the male sex is divided into boys, warriors, and elders. The first stage continues until circumcision, which may be performed any time between thirteen and seventeen, or sometimes in the case of poor people not till twenty. Those who are circumcised about the same time (see p. 261 for details) are said to belong to the same age, and are known collectively by a distinctive name, such as 'the White Swords' or 'the Invincibles.' After circumcision the warriors plait their hair, but, except for a small skin hanging over the shoulders, and their arms and ornaments (which are described by Mr. Hollis), go absolutely naked. They subsist entirely on meat, milk, and blood, and in particular may not smoke or touch intoxicants. They do not live with the married people, but in separate kraals with the immature unmarried girls, with whom they are allowed to cohabit freely. Tradition¹ (see p. 117) ascribes this practice to the fear that if girls were kept away from the society of their own warriors, they would let themselves be seduced by the enemy; but the remedy has been worse than the danger it was to avert. The direct physical evil is considerable, and is partly responsible for the diminishing numbers of the race. Besides this, female morality after such a girlhood was naturally low, even when the Masai kept to themselves. Now that they have come into contact with civilization, prostitution and venereal disease have become deplorably frequent. About the age of twenty-seven or thirty, or nowadays when raiding is forbidden somewhat earlier, a warrior marries and settles down. If he is a man of wealth and importance he may be elected chief¹, in which case he is responsible for the discipline of the warriors and their appearance when summoned to fight, though he does not go to the wars himself. As with most East African tribes an elder's ideal of existence seems to be ease, not unmixed with drunkenness. Proverb No. 64 (p. 249), 'Don't lie with your feet against a post like the father of many sons,' meaning 'Don't give yourself airs,' is a vivid picture of the Masai pater familias taking his ease in the primitive posture of lying on his back with his feet against a post, while his family do all the work for him.

¹ It is said that among the Dinka, Bari, and Shilluk there are similar customs of free love.

Masai elder wearing a fur cloak which is supposed to resemble a cobra's hood.

Masai women, unlike the men, are carefully dressed in leather garments, but a rare, and according to our ideas most unbecoming, custom forces them to shave their heads. Before marriage they are circumcised, and signalize their change of state by wearing large circular earrings and necklaces of brass and iron wire. Both girls and women have their legs and arms encased in iron ornaments, so that they can sometimes hardly walk.

This military organization of the Masai made them a most effective body for destructive military operations, and explains not only the predominant position which they acquired in East Africa, but also the respect which they inspired and the extent to which their customs were imitated by other tribes. On the other hand, it probably also is the reason why they never founded any state or polity analogous to the kingdoms of Uganda and Unyoro. The centre of political gravity was not with the elders or chiefs, but with a republic of young men, governed by ideas of military comradeship and desirous only of military glory. Retirement from this band of warriors as a chief was honourable, but seems to have been recognized as a removal to an inferior sphere of activity. The chiefs arranged the details of the raids which the warriors wished to undertake, but their power of compelling them to do anything which they did not wish was very slight.

The nearest approach to a central and superior authority among the Masai is the medicine man or Laibon (more correctly Ol-oiboni; see p. 324, &c.). They all belong to the Kidongi family of the Aiser clan, and are said to be descended from a personage called Ol-le-Mweiya, who came down from heaven and was found by the Aiser sitting on the top of Mount Ngong. This was nine generations ago, the genealogy having been preserved. The influence of the medicine man is due to his supposed power of prophecy and divination. No explanation is offered of this power, nor does it appear that the Laibons are believed to enjoy the acquaintance and assistance of definite spiritual beings; but they can foretell the future by such methods as throwing stones out of a horn, inspecting the entrails of slaughtered animals, interpreting dreams, and delivering oracles when intoxicated with honey wine. Great, however, as is their influence, it does not appear that either among the Masai or the Nandi, where similar institutions prevail, they have ever attempted to assume a position like that of the various small sultans of the coast or the kings to the west of Lake Victoria.

The most celebrated of these medicine men was Mbatian, the father of the present holder of the office, Lenana, who died about 1890. He is celebrated for having prophesied outbreaks of cattle plague and small-pox, which duly came to pass; and also for having foretold the arrival of white people. It is generally said that he bade the Masai be friendly to them, but Mr. Hollis could not find any corroboration of this statement. His death was followed by a disputed succession. There is considerable discrepancy as to the details of the story, but, according to the versions taken down by Mr. Hollis (p. 327), Mbatian told his eldest son Sendeyo that on the morrow he would invest him with the insignia of a Laibon, of which the principal is an iron club. Lenana, the younger son, overheard, and presented himself before his father very early the next morning. Mbatian, who was very aged and had only one eye, behaved much like Isaac in similar circumstances, and gave his younger son the insignia, saying 'Thou shalt be great among thy brothers and among all the people.' In any case, Lenana succeeded, and was accepted as Laibon by all the Masai except the Loita. This created a division in the tribe, and as it roughly corresponded with the division between British and German territory, Sendeyo was long regarded as the chief of the German Masai and Lenana of the British. But in 1902 Sendeyo quarrelled with the German administration, made his peace with his brother, and came over to the British Protectorate.

The religious ideas of the Masai, as collected by Mr. Hollis, are vague and unformulated. The commonest word for God is Eng-aĩ, which it will be observed is a substantive with a feminine article. Eng-aĩ appears to be used either quite indefinitely and impersonally of remarkable natural phenomena (especially rain, the sky, and volcanoes), or else definitely and personally of superhuman beings. In this latter sense it is said that there are two Gods (Ing-aĩtin are), the Black God and the Red God, of whom the former is kindly, but the latter malevolent. It is the special function and pleasure of the Black God to provide rain, but the Red God objects to turning on the celestial water-tap. Loud thunder is the result of the Red God trying to get to earth through the Black God's dominions in order to kill men, but the distant rumbling is the Black God saying to him, 'Do let them alone; don't kill them.' This happy fancy that the good god is near but the bad god far, which is probably no accident but due to the fundamental characteristics of the Masai mind, has doubtless saved untold suffering, for it does away at once with the necessity for human sacrifices and all similar methods of propitiating cruel powers. Besides the Black and Red Gods there is a quasi-divine personage called Naiteru-Kop, who appears to have been, if not the creator, at least the arranger of the present order of things. A man called Le-eyo appears to have been the principal patriarch, though there were also Dorobo (hunting tribes) in his time, so that he was not strictly the first man. Death entered the world owing to his selfishness and disobedience (p. 269), and, by an incident common in stories of this kind, his younger son became the father of the Masai, while his elder son lost his birthright, and was the ancestor of the inferior tribes.

The worship of the Masai, like their beliefs, seems to be somewhat vague and wanting in ceremonial, but Mr. Hollis's collection shows that they have definite prayers, and that they petition the deity more frequently and fervently than the surrounding tribes are known to do. This is confirmed by Thomson, who speaks of them howling out prayers to Eng-aĩ for hours together. By a custom not without parallel in other nations, it would appear that the women pray twice a day, but the men only occasionally and in grave circumstances. The prayers which are for children, rain, and victory, are addressed to Eng-aĩ as a distinct personality 'who is prayed to and hears.' Remarkable also is the phrase 'the highlands and lowlands of our vast country which belongs to our God.' On the other hand, the sun and moon, the morning and evening star, and the mountain clouds are also invoked, and one song says in two consecutive verses, 'He whom I pray to is God,' and 'He whom I pray to is Lenana, our medicine man.' It is difficult to say whether we have here primitive and undeveloped religious sentiment where the personality of the deity is hardly separated from striking natural phenomena, or remnants of some old cultus of the heavenly bodies, mountains, and tribal deities preserved in a hazy way by a military race which had not paid much attention to religion.

The Masai believe that ordinary persons die like cattle, and they throw away their corpses to be eaten by hyenas¹, in the revoltingly unceremonious way common to many East African tribes. Medicine men, however, and influential people are buried, and their souls are said to pass into snakes, which are respected in consequence. Many tribes on the Nile also reverence snakes. It is noticeable that death and misfortune are not attributed to witchcraft. The Laibon is not the same as the Witch Doctor of the Bantu tribes, and it is no part of his duties to detect witches.

As the Masai men will practically do nothing but fight or tend cattle, they are naturally dependent on others for all articles, including their arms, which cannot be manufactured by women. There is among them a special tribe of smiths, called Il-Kunono, who make iron weapons, but are treated as inferiors and not allowed to marry Masai women. A somewhat similar tribe are the Dorobo or hunters.

It would appear that the military organization, the aversion to hunting, to eating game or vegetable food, and to engaging in agriculture or any productive art are peculiarities specially developed by the Masai, though some of them have been imitated by other tribes. Another peculiarity is the shape of their houses—long low buildings constructed of poles, grass, and mud, and divided into rooms by partitions. Their other customs, however, seem to tally with those of the Latuka, Bari, and Dinka, as far as differences of residence and occupation permit. Remarkable points of agreement are the nudity of the men, the shaven heads of the women, extraction of the middle teeth of the lower jaw, resting in a standing position on one leg, drinking the blood from living animals, and spitting as a sign of affection or benediction.

Linguistic evidence points the same way, though ampler and clearer information about the languages of the Nile is desirable for purposes of comparison. It is no want of respect to the labours of Sir H. Johnston and others to say that the researches of Mr. Hollis have for the first time made the grammatical system of the Masai language coherent and clear. It has a marked love for lengthy formations, and until the articles, relatives, verbal prefixes and affixes had been separated out it was impossible to discover not only roots, but even the simple forms of nouns and verbs. Much still remains to be done in dividing these forms into their essential parts and formative elements, but the general structure of the language appears to be established beyond doubt.

Except for the length of the words, the phonetics are simple and easy. Difficult groups of consonants and the harsher gutturals are absent, and the utterance seems to be somewhat languid, and in particular the pronunciation of the labials tends to be indistinct. The verb is clearly distinguished from the noun, and shows great luxuriance of formation, but has only moderate powers of expressing the categories of personality and time. A prefix indicates not only the subject but also the pronominal object; but the distinction is not always complete: thus Aasuj means either I follow thee, or they follow me; Kisuj, thou followest me, they follow thee, or we follow him. Only present and past times are clearly and regularly expressed. The future is sporadic. The imperative is not, as in so many languages, the simple verbal root, but a form analogous to the subjunctive. The negative is expressed by m or mi, but various circumlocutions are also used. There is a great wealth of derivative forms. These comprise an impersonal passive; forms denoting motion to and from the speaker; a form indicating that the action is done in the interests of some one; another indicating the instrument with which or the place in which a thing is done; reflexive, causative, and neuter formations.

Unlike the verb, the noun shows very little power of inflexion, and can only indicate number. The plural is formed by a great variety of suffixes, such as a, i, o, ra, ta, tin, shi, shin, ni, n, k, &c., but it is noticeable that the singular is often formed from the plural, that is to say, a collective noun is individualized by the addition of a suffix, e.g. Il-Keyu, the Elgeyo tribe, Ol-Keyuni, one man of the tribe; il-akir, stars, but ol-akira, a particular star. Not only are there no case inflexions, but prepositions are almost entirely absent, so that the possibility of indicating case relations in a substantive is very limited. The nominative and accusative are not distinguished except by position, even in pronouns. The genitive is expressed in various ways, usually with the help of the article and a particle of varying form, in which the letter l often occurs. Similar forms, but with t in the place of l, are used as a local case with the most various meanings, such as in, out, to, from, at, with, &c. These very defective modes of expression are supplemented by the use of the derivative forms of the verb which indicate motion to or from, action in the interest of a person or by means of a thing. After the verb, the vitality of the language appears to be concentrated in the article and the relative. The article (ol, masc. sing., il, plural; en, fem. sing., in plural¹) indicates number and gender. The latter is more analogous to the grammatical genders in German than to the simple distinction between male and female beings, ol being used to denote what is big and strong, and en what is small and weak, so that side by side with instances of sexual distinction like ol-ashe, a male calf, eng-ashe, a female calf, we also have such pairs as ol-ayōni, a boy, eng-ayōni, a small boy; ol-alem, the sword, eng-alem, the knife. The power of expressing the genitive and locative cases resides principally in the article, and as a rule a noun is unintelligible unless it is accompanied by it, the chief exception being abstract nouns which naturally are not numerous in the stage of mental development which the Masai have reached. It is noticeable that the article is more general in signification than either the definite or indefinite articles of other languages, and merely expresses the existence of individual objects or collective groups as separate entities. But that it is of the nature of an article and not a mere formative prefix is shown by the fact that the demonstrative, interrogative, and some other pronouns can be substituted for it (e.g. ol-tuñgani, the man; ledo-tuñgani, that man; kalo-tuñgani, what man?). Very remarkable is the use of the article with a genitive to form a substantival expression, equivalent to the use of an adjective as a noun in other languages, e.g. ol-lo-'l-masi, the-of-the-mane, that is, the maned one or lion; ol-le-'l-lughunya, the-of-the-head, the brain (cf. ἐγκέφαλος); ol-le-'ng-aina, the-of-the-hand, the handed one, the elephant (cf. Sanscrit hastin, an elephant, from hasta, hand).

The relative which offers many resemblances to the article consists of the syllables o, oo in the masculine, and na, naa in the feminine. By prefixing it almost any part of the verb can be turned into an attribute or relative sentence. This neat and concise usage is an effective compensation for the scarcity of real adjectives and participles. Also the article and the relative can be used together to form a noun: ol-o-unisho, the-who-sows, that is, the sower.

As far as our limited knowledge of it permits us to judge, Latuka is the language which most resembles Masai. It is spoken to the east of the Nile, about 4° N., rather to the north of Nimule. Unfortunately we have no account of the grammar, but Emin Bey (Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, 1882, pp. 174-8) and Baker (The Albert Nyanza) have given some contributions towards a vocabulary. About a third of the words known are obviously the same as the Masai equivalents, and of the remainder many look as if they would prove identical when we have a better knowledge of the changes the consonants may undergo and can separate the roots and formative elements more accurately. This is a fair percentage of correspondences, if we consider how quickly unwritten languages change, and how often one member of a pair of related words may not be that in most general use. A traveller's vocabulary of English and German would probably give 'dog' and 'Hund' as corresponding words, and not mention 'hound.' An inspection of the Latuka words suggests that a, e, and n represent an article similar to that in Masai, but that the letter l is not used in this connexion. Aker, a male sheep, and naker, a female sheep, corresponding to the Masai ol-kerr and en-gerr, are significant.

The next nearest relative of Masai seems to be Bari¹, spoken to the north-west of Latuka on both banks of the Nile. Friedrich Müller (Grundriss der Sprachwissenschaft, Band III, 1884) noticed the resemblance of this language both in grammar and vocabulary to Masai. The vocabulary would appear, however, to contain more than one element, and a considerable proportion of the words are unlike Masai, and perhaps are West African in origin. The grammatical forms are less developed and luxuriant than in Masai, and hence the words are shorter, but the system seems essentially similar. The verb has an active and passive voice, and distinguishes a durative, an aorist, and an imperative. The noun has a singular and plural formed by various affixes as in Masai, and the singular is sometimes the longer form, being derived from the plural by the addition of a syllable indicative of individuality. There are a few prepositions, but not many, though more than in Masai. The pronouns are fairly like those in Masai, and there is an article, masculine lo, feminine na, plural ti, but it is suffixed to the substantive. It is possible, however, that a k which is sometimes found at the beginning of words may be the remnant of an article. Compare, for instance, kolong, sun; kare, river; konge, eye; komong, face, with the Masai eng-oloŋg, eng-are, eng-oŋgu, eng-omom (cf. the vocatives with prefixed K, p. 15). A relative prefix like o-, na- seems not to be known, but we find adjectival phrases like ko kure, thirsty (with thirst), and lo-dit (masculine), na-dit (feminine), small, which recall Masai constructions.

The Dinka¹ language, spoken to the north of Bari, has, as Friedrich Müller points out, considerable resemblance to it. A good number of words can be reasonably compared with Masai forms, but superficially the likeness is not great, as the Dinka words are generally monosyllabic and rarely have more than two syllables. Lem (knife) seems to be the Masai eng-alem; mac (fire), en-gima; ton (man), ol-tuŋgani; pey (moon), ol-apa, Bari yapa; kir (water), eng-are, Bari kare. It is not, however, probable that the Dinka forms are primitive, as they are capable of considerable changes which may be explicable by reference to older and fuller forms. For instance, lyeb, the tongue (? Masai ol-ŋejepe), can become lyep, lyema, lyem, lip and lib; mac, fire, mañe, mañ, and méc; tik, a woman, wife (? connected with en-dito, in-doiye), tine, tin, ting, dyar. Except for these changes which affect the plural (e. g. ran, a man, ror, men) and the word on which a genitive depends (tik, wife, tin e beyn did, wife of the great chief), Dinka resembles Bari in its general construction. It would seem that Bari is nearest to the common substratum of these languages, though it has been exposed to foreign influences, and that Masai (with which Latuka should perhaps be included) and Dinka represent modifications in two different directions, Masai having a profusion of formative elements which are heaped one on the other and result in very long words, while Dinka is prone to contraction, which produces irregular inflexions.

Turning to the East African languages I think that when the Nandi-Lumbwa and Suk-Turkana groups have been more fully investigated they will prove to be closely allied to Masai, and therefore to the languages with which the latter is connected. To the best of my belief, our only materials for the study of these tongues are Johnston's and Høbley's vocabularies, and our knowledge of the grammar is very defective. It is clear that there is a resemblance between simple words, particularly those denoting parts of the body (e. g. Eye: Masai, eng-oŋgu; Nandi, konyak: Suk, koñ; Turkana, ekoñ. Mouth: Masai, en-gutuk; Nandi, kōtet; Suk, kôte; Turkana, akotok). I think traces of articles can be detected, and Nandi certainly has many formative elements combined with the essential part of the word, such as -t and -da to mark the singular, and k, nek, and wek for the plural. When the precise force of these prefixes and affixes is known, the degree of relationship with Masai will be plainer. The verbal forms quoted from Nandi seem very similar to those in Masai.

Nandi.	compare	Masai.
Aonget ane, I know.		Asuj nanu, I follow.
Inget inye, thou knowest.		Isuj iye, thou followest.

Menget icek, they do not know.		Mesuj, they do not follow.

In Masai it is not necessary to express the personal pronoun except to avoid ambiguity. Suk, like Masai and Nandi, has m as a sign of the negative, but Turkana has nye.

It does not appear to me that these languages—Masai, Nandi-Lumbwa, Suk and Turkana—have any clear kinship with Somali and Galla. The coincidences in vocabulary seem explicable as loan words. The grammatical system of all is compatible with the view, if it can be supported by other arguments, that all can be traced back to one stock, that is to say, none of the languages show an essentially different method of forming words and constructing sentences, as does, for instance, the Bantu group. But the similarity consists in the absence of striking differences rather than in points of positive agreement. It may be noted, however, that Somali has an article; that the negative is ma; that there are some resemblances with Masai in both the personal and possessive pronouns, and that those verbs which take prefixes offer a general resemblance to the corresponding Masai formations (Somali: a-qan, ta-qan, ya-qan, na-qan, ta-qan-in, ya-qan-in, I know, you know, &c., compare Masai a-suj, i-suj, e-suj, ki-suj, i-sujusuju, e-suj).

It may be of interest as throwing light on the relationships of East African languages to give the numerals of those which have been mentioned, as well as of Ja-luo, Acholi, and Madi.

¹ Endoroj and sal, the latter according to F. Müller, are also used for 9. Of the higher Masai numbers, Tigitám (20) seems to be the Galla digám, arám (40), and onóm (50), perhaps the Somali ařartan and kontan. Osom (30) is the same as the Suk word, and apparently connected with Somok (3).

This list of numbers suggests the following reflections among others: (a) Madi is quite different from the other languages, and gives the impression more than Somali of belonging to a different group. (b) Somali has lent numbers to Masai, Latuka, Nandi, Turkana, and Suk, but is otherwise distinct. (c) The remaining languages had originally separate numerals only up to 5. The higher numerals are expressed in Nandi and Masai by borrowed words or new formations, in the others by compounds which more or less clearly mean $5+1$, $5+2$, &c. It is remarkable that both in Bari and Dinka, as well as Ja-luo and Acholi, though they do not otherwise correspond in details, 7 and 9 are clearly $5+2$ and $5+4$, but 8 is not so plainly $5+3$. (d) The numerals up to 5 show a fair correspondence. 4 is practically the same in all languages, and so is 2, except in Nandi and Suk, where it is replaced by a word which may possibly mean 'pair,' just as juz is commonly used for 2 in Arabic dialects. For 5 there are at least two words: mut and imyet in Nandi and Masai; kanat and ekan in Bari. Suk uses both. Possibly *wded*s in Dinka and abity' in Ja-luo represent variations of the first root, as may also the Bu in the Bari numerals from 6 to 9. 1 shows great variety, which may perhaps be paralleled in other families of languages, for instance, Aryan; but it is strange that there should be so little agreement as to 3. Masai and Turkana use uni, Nandi and Suk somok. Jala in Bari stands alone. Dinka, Ja-luo, and Acholi use some word like dek, which perhaps reappears in the Bari for 8, budök ($=5+3$). The general conclusion to be drawn is that all these languages (except of course Somali and Madi), while forming closer sub-groups among themselves, belong to a common stock, and that the nearest relation of Masai is Latuka, though they have been separated long enough for each to develop special features.

Mr. Hollis's book will appeal chiefly to the scientific world, and perhaps is, with the exception of Sir Harry Johnston and Krapf's works, the most valuable contribution which has yet been made to the anthropology and philology of the British possessions in East Africa. But it will also have, if used as it should be, a very great practical value. Experience gained in many parts of the world has impressed on me the obvious but much neglected truth that if one wishes to be on friendly terms with other races and to avoid misunderstandings, the first essential is to speak their language. There can be no doubt that in East Africa, as elsewhere, natives are delighted to converse with Europeans, and equally little doubt that disastrous and costly misunderstandings have occurred because no one was capable of giving or receiving explanations when trouble was brewing. Hitherto few of our officers have known any language but a little Swahili, and except for very intrepid spirits the absence or inadequacy of textbooks has made the acquisition of all others a practical impossibility. Of late the languages of Kikuyu and Ukamba have been made more accessible, and the same may now be said of Masai, though Nandi, Suk, and Turkana still await an expositor. It is much to be desired, however, that Government should encourage and somewhat liberally reward proficiency in these languages. In practice, the difficulty is to insist on a knowledge of any language but the lingua franca, Swahili, because the others are mostly spoken in comparatively small districts, and it is impossible to restrict an officer's service to one linguistic area, or to require him to learn Masai when he may any day be removed to a Somali-speaking district. But much might be done by offering better recognition, pecuniary and other, of the services rendered by those who are willing to take the trouble of learning the less known tongues. A few hundreds expended in prizes is good economy. There may still be occasions when ability to carry on a discussion in Nandi may avert a punitive expedition costing tens of thousands of pounds.

I agree with the opinion indicated by Mr. Hollis in the last paragraph of his preface—that the only hope for the Masai is that under intelligent guidance they may gradually settle down and adopt a certain measure of civilization. Any plan of leaving them to themselves with their old military and social organization untouched seems to me fraught with grave danger for the prosperity of the tribe as well as for the public peace. But whatever their future may be, I am sure that the author of this book, which I now commend to the attention of officials as well as men of science, has, by putting within the reach of all a knowledge of the language and the customs of the Masai, done much to facilitate a settlement of all questions which may arise between them and our administration.

EN-GUTUK OO'-L-MAASAE MASAI GRAMMAR

ALPHABET AND PRONUNCIATION.

VOWELS.

A represents the English a in father.

Ē „ „ a in fate.

E „ „ e in benefit.

Ā „ „ a in dare, but longer and more open.

I „ „ i in hit.

Ī „ „ i in ravine.

O „ „ o in not.

Ō „ „ o in mote.

Ó „ „ aw in paw.

U „ „ u in bull.

Ū „ „ u in flute.

Ǻ „ „ u in but, o in tongue.

Ai „ „ i in ice, ai in aisle.

Ae is a diphthong similar to ai, but formed by a union of the vowels a and e.

Au represents the English ow in how.

Oi „ „ oi in oil.

Ei. These two letters are usually pronounced separately, but they are sometimes slurred over and are scarcely distinguishable from ei in eight or ey in they.

Whenever ai or oi are not pronounced as diphthongs, the i is marked by a diaeresis, thus, *ai*².

Vowels are only doubled when there is a distinct repetition of a single sound. Sometimes, however, sounds which when spoken slowly must be indicated by a double vowel, are contracted into a long single vowel when spoken quickly.

¹ Examples of ai, ai, and ae:—'Ng-ai, the bows; eng-ai, the god; eng-ae, the other.

CONSONANTS.

B, d, k as in English.

G is hard, as in the English word go.

H is used as an aspirate only in a few interjections.

Gh is a g followed by an h as in log-hut, and resembles the gh in Sanskrit. It is not pronounced like the Arabic ghain.

J nearly resembles the English j, though it is sometimes pronounced like dy.

Ch as in church. It, however, is sometimes exchangeable with j or dy: e. g. ol-chani, the tree, may also be pronounced ol-jani or ol-dyani.

Sh, l, m, n as in English.

Ng has two separate sounds, the one hard as in the English word finger, the other as in singer. The latter sound is written ñg.

Ny. This sound is similar to ni in the English word minion, or ñ in Spanish.

P is more explosive than in English.

R is always well pronounced or rolled on the tongue. The Northern Masai sometimes pronounce this sound like a burring r.

S, t, w as in English.

W̃. In a few words there appears to be a trace of a w which is only partially pronounced even when talking slowly: e. g. w̃ōu, come.

Hw represents the sound of wh in the Scotch why or wherefore.

B, p, v, and w are pronounced in a lazy way by just opening the lips.

Y is a consonant, as in yard.

CHANGES OF LETTERS, AND REMARKS.

The Masai of Nairobi and Naivasha sometimes use a for e. Thus:
Ang-are (for eng-are), the water.

Before i, aa changes to an accentuated single a. Example:

Á-isuj-i (for aa-isuj-i), I am washed.

A and o are occasionally interchangeable. One hears, for instance:

En-aiyasha or en-aiposha, the lake.

Añgata or oñgota, the plain.

Apa or opa, formerly.

E and i when spoken rapidly often sound as if they were the same letter. It is in consequence sometimes difficult to distinguish between such words as a-gel, to choose, and a-gil, to break.

E is changed to i when followed by a. Examples:

Ol-figojine, the hyena;	il-figojinia, the hyenas.
A-ure, to fear;	a-t-uri-a, I feared.

The Northern Masai frequently change i to e when the i is joined by a consonant to a. Examples:

Aidima or aidema, I was able.
Aidipa or aidepa, I finished.

When i is the first letter of a word it is usually dropped if preceded by another word ending in a vowel.

Aisho 'ndae (for aisho indae), I give you.
Aisho 'l-ayok (for aisho il-ayok), I give the boys.

I is also dropped whenever the sound permits at the beginning of sentences. Thus:

'N-atīnin (for in-atīnin), the stories,
'L-omon (for il-omon), the news.

When i is the last letter of a word and is followed by a vowel, y is often inserted to join the two vowels together. Examples:

En-gerai-y-ai (for en-gerai ai), my child.

Numerous changes take place in the spelling of verbs which commence with i. For a complete list vide page 53. It will be sufficient to give here the general rules.

I. The first letter of the verb (i) falls out whenever preceded by another i and followed by i, l, n, ng, ny, r, s, u, w, or y.
Examples:

A-iik, to clean (teeth);	i-'ik, thou cleanest (teeth).
A-ilep, to climb;	i-'lep, thou climbest.
A-inepu, to meet;	i-'nepu, thou meetest.
A-iñgor, to look;	i-'ñgor, thou lookest.
A-inyañg-u, to buy;	i-'nyañg-u, thou buyest.
A-irag, to sleep;	i-'rag, thou sleepest.
A-isēye, to touch;	i-'sēye, thou touchest.
A-iush, to lose;	i-'ush, thou lovest.
A-iwō-u, to catch blood in a vessel;	i-'wō-u, thou catchest blood in a vessel.
A-iyam, to marry;	i-'yam, thou marriest.

II. The i is changed to n whenever it is preceded by another i and followed by d, g, k, t, and sh. As will be shown shortly, the letters k, t, and sh cannot follow n; these letters therefore change at the same time to g, d, and j respectively. Examples:

A-idim, to be able;	i-ndim, thou art able.
A-igany, to fill;	i-ngany, thou fillest.
A-iken, to count;	i-ngen, thou countest.
A-itobir, to prepare;	i-ndobir, thou preparest.
A-ishop, to wear;	i-njop, thou wearest.

III. The i is changed to m whenever it is preceded by another i and followed by b, p, v, or w. It will be shown presently that p, v, and w are interchangeable and cannot follow n; these letters are consequently changed at the same time to b. Examples:

A-ibelekeny, to turn over;	i-mbelekeny, thou turnest over.
A-ipot, or A-iyot, or A-iwot, to call;	i-mbot, thou callest.

I and y are interchangeable when followed by e or o. The Northern Masai generally use the former, the Southern the latter. Examples:

En-gewárie or en-gewárye, the night.
Tolíkió or tolíkyo, tell.

Ye sometimes becomes ie after n. Examples:

A-toníe (for a-tónye), to sit on.
A-iminíe (for a-imínye), to lose.

O becomes u when joined by a consonant to a. Examples:

A-iko, to do; a-iku-na, I did.
A-iñgor, to look; a-iñgur-a, I looked.

The Northern Masai sometimes pronounce u like o, or like the German ö. Examples:

A-idor (for a-idur), to move. A-söj (for a-suj), to follow.

B and k are sometimes interchangeable. Examples:

En-garikōbo or en-garibōbo, the mongoose.

Kinōkop or Kinōbop, a district near Naivasha known to Europeans as Kinangop.

Gh and k are interchangeable. The former sound is more used by the Southern Masai than by the Northern, and the women of Nairobi and Naivasha employ it more frequently than the men.

Both gh and k change to g when following n:

Enna-kerai or enna-gherai, this child; en-gerai, the child.
Ol-kujita or en-gujita, the blade of grass.
A-iko or a-igho, to do; i-ngo, thou dost; i-ngōko or i-ngōgho, you do.

P, v, and w are interchangeable. The Northern Masai generally use p, the Southern v or w. Examples:

Ol-poror, ol-*v*oror, or ol-*w*oror, the generation, age.
Pôkin, *v*ôkin, or *w*ôkin, all.

K is occasionally interchangeable with p, v, and w.

For instance, ol-pukuri (or ol-yukuri or ol-wukuri), the (large) gourd, is also sometimes expressed ol-kupuri (pl. il-pukurto or il-kupurto).

Before p, v, and w, n becomes m, and the p, v, or w changes to b. Examples:

Ol-pukuri (or ol-yukuri or ol-wukuri), the (large) gourd.
Em-*b*ukuri, the (small) gourd.
I-m*b*iri, thou fliest, (from a-*i*piri, to fly).

When k is the last letter of a verb, the root undergoes various changes in the formation of the past tense. For a complete list vide p. 56.

It will be sufficient to state here that the k is dropped unless the letter which precedes it is i or u. Examples:

A-lak, to unfasten; a-ta-la-a, I unfastened.
A-mok, to become accustomed to; a-ta-mo-o, I became accustomed to.

But A-rik, to take (a person); a-to-rik-o, I took (a person).
A-nunuk, to fold; a-tu-nunuk-o, I folded.

The Northern Masai also frequently omit k both at the end and in the body of a word. Examples:

Il-tuñgana (for il-tuñganak), the men.
Il-ñganaiyo (for il-ñganaiyok), the fruit.
Kitua (for kituak), big (pl.).
A-ikweniye (for a-ikwenikye), to laugh at.
Arai (for araki), or.

Sh can only be used after a vowel or at the commencement of a word. Examples:

A-isho, to give.
Shoo, the grazing ground.
Elle-shani or enna-shani, this tree.
Le-shoruet, na-shoruet, O (the) friend!

After l, sh becomes ch, and after n, j. Examples:

I-njo, thou givest.
Ol-chani or en-jani, the tree.
Ol-choruet or en-joruet, the friend.

Ch can only be used after l.

J occasionally changes to t in the formation of past tenses of verbs.

Examples :

A-ji-ōyo, not to return ;	a-ti-ōyo, I have not returned.
A-j-ōki, to say to ;	a-ti-aka, I said to.

The l of the masculine article (vide p. 10) is dropped before words beginning with e, i, r, s, and y. Examples :

O-engat (for ol-engat), the male wildebeest.
 O-iarata (for ol-iarata), the valley.
 O-rorei (for ol-rorei), the word.
 O-sarge (for ol-sarge), the blood.
 O-yōyai (for ol-yōyai), the porcupine.

It has been stated that before r and s the l of the masculine article is assimilated as in Arabic, and that the double consonant is heard. This is, however, not the case. When the syllables are spoken separately, the singular article is clearly pronounced o, not or or os ; and in the plural the article drops out altogether, unless it follows a word ending in a consonant, when an i is used, not ir or is.

Gh, k, t, and sh change to g, g, d, and j respectively after n.

Examples :

En-gīyo (for en-ghīyo), the daughter.
 'N-gīshu (for 'n-kīshu), the cattle.
 I-ngilikwan-u (for i-nkilikwan-u), ask !
 En-dim (for en-tim), the wood.
 I-ndash-o (for i-ntash-o), stand !
 En-jōni (for en-shōni), the piece of hide.
 I-njop-o (for i-nshop-o), wear !

The n of the feminine article (vide p. 10) falls out before nouns commencing with one of the following letters : e, i, m, ñg, ny, r, s, u, w, and y. Examples :

E-engat (for en-engat), the female wildebeest.
 E-ilata (for en-ilata), the oil.
 E-mōti (for en-mōti), the cooking pot.
 E-ñgorōyōni (for en-ñgorōyōni), the woman.
 E-nyalata (for en-nyalata), the cud.
 E-rug (for en-rug), the hump.
 E-siangiki (for en-siangiki), the young woman.
 E-ülulu (for en-ülulu), the pit.
 E-wargas (for en-wargas), the female Grant's gazelle.
 E-yä (for en-yä), the male.

Before b, n becomes m, and before p, v, or w, n becomes m, and the p, v, or w changes to b:

Em-bae (for en-bae), the arrow.

I-mbelekeny-a (for i-nbelekeny-a), turn over!

Em-ḥoūt (for en-pōūt, or en-ḡoūt, or en-woūt), the trench.

I-mḥot-o (for i-nḥot-o, or i-nḡot-o, or i-nwoḥot-o), call!

Before substantives commencing with l, the n of the feminine article is assimilated, the double consonant being distinctly pronounced.

Examples:

El-lusye (for en-lusye), the hole in the wall.

El-loḥgo (for en-loḥgo), the shield.

R must always be preceded by a vowel or another r. Examples:

Ol-orora, the crowd. 'N-gera, the children. 'N-gerra, the sheep.

R is sometimes omitted in the body of a noun to form diminutives, or is changed to l or y. Examples:

E-ḥgorōyōni, the woman; e-ḥgooyōni, the female (used in a deprecatory sense).

En-gerai, the child; en-gelai, the little child.

Ol-ōwaru, the beast of prey; eng-ōwayu, the small beast of prey.

U and w, when followed by a vowel, are interchangeable, the former being used by the Northern, the latter by the Southern Masai.

Examples:

Atua or atwa, I died or within.

Ol-mōruo or ol-morwo, the old man.

Hw is occasionally substituted for u or w, otherwise it is not used.

Examples:

E-hwēji (for e-wēji), the place.

E-hwaso (for e-uaso), the river.

Ol-osōhwan (for ol-osōwan), the buffalo.

THE ACCENT.

In most words all syllables are accentuated alike, a very slight stress being perhaps laid on the penultimate. This is more particularly noticeable when the last syllable but one contains a long vowel, e. g. ol-ayōni, 'n-jonīto.

Should the accent fall on any other syllable but the penultimate, it is specially marked, thus: ol-mōruo, kewárie.

These words are sometimes, and probably correctly, pronounced ol-morwo, kewarye; but owing possibly to the difficulty of making penultimate: last but one syllable

w or y follow r, without stopping in the middle of the word, the w and y are generally changed to u and i.

The accent, such as it is, does not fall on the penultimate in the following cases:

I. When the subject of a verb is the first person plural, the last syllable is always slightly accentuated. Examples:

Ki-súj, we follow (him). Ki-tu-suj-á, we have followed (him).

Ki-suj means either, thou followest me, or he or they follow thee; and ki-tu-suj-a, thou hast followed me, or he or they have followed thee.

II. Whenever one of two a's falls out before i in verbs commencing with the latter letter, the remaining a is rather more strongly sounded than the other syllables:

Á-isuj-a (for aa-isuj-a), I washed thee, or he or they washed me.

E-ñgas á-isuj (for e-ñgas aa-isuj), they begin to wash (him).

E-iyōlo á-isuj-a (for e-iyōlo aa-isuj-a), they know how to wash (him).

Some confusion is at times caused by the subject or object not being expressed when it is a personal pronoun. For instance, the woman said to him, and he said to the woman, are both translated by e-ti-aka e-ñgorōyōni. The difference is marked by raising or lowering the voice at the end of the substantive, and the following rule is invariable.

If the subject is the substantive, the voice is raised as in asking a question; if the subject is the pronoun, the voice is lowered as when finishing a sentence:

Thus: E-ti-aka e-ñgorōyōⁿⁱ means, the woman said to him.

Whilst, E-ti-aka e-ñgorōyō_{ni} means, he, she, or they said to the woman.

In the same way the difference between, for instance, I followed thee, and he, she, or they followed me, is marked by raising or lowering the voice at the end of the word, e.g.:

Aa^{suj}, he, she, or they follow me. Aa_{suj}, I follow thee.

Aa-tu-suj-^a, he, she, or they followed me. Aa-tu-suj-_a, I followed thee.

Á-isuj-^a, he, she, or they washed me. Á-isuj-_a, I washed thee.

The same forms are used for the simple relative, whether it is employed as the subject or the object of the verb. When the relative is the subject, however, the voice is raised at the end of the verb; when the object, it is lowered.

Ol-tuñgani ò-tu-suj-^a, the man who followed him.

Ol-tuñgani ò-tu-suj-_a, the man whom he followed.

GENDER AND NUMBER.

The Masai language distinguishes by the article two genders or classes answering approximately to masculine and feminine. As a general rule the former signifies big, strong, and masculine; whilst the latter may be taken to mean something of a weak or feminine nature, and also of a diminutive or affectionate character. There are, it is true, exceptions to this rule, for whereas ol-origha, a small three-legged stool, il-kiyo, tears, and ol-kimōjino, the finger or toe, are masculine, eng-aina, the arm or hand, en-geju, the leg or foot, e-muny, a rhinoceros, and en-gukuu or en-dyemasi, a devil or fantastic wild beast, which takes the place of the dragon in English fairy tales, are feminine. But on the whole it will be found to be correct, and the following list of examples will help to prove the theory:

Masculine.	Feminine.
Ol-tuñgani, the man.	En-duñgani, the little man.
Ol-ayōni, the boy.	Eng-ayōni, the little boy.
Ol-dia, the dog.	En-dia, the bitch or pup.
O-sanja, the male lover.	E-sanja, the female lover.
Ol-karsis, the rich man.	En-garsis, the rich woman.
Ol-ashe, the bull calf.	Eng-ashe, the cow calf.
Ol-alem, the sword.	Eng-alem, the knife.
Il-kujit, the long, coarse grass.	'N-gujit, the short grass or turf.
Ol-kerr, the ram.	En-gerr, the ewe.
Ol-aputani, the father or son-in-law.	Eng-aputani, the mother or daughter-in-law.

One word, e-wēji, the place, although to all appearances feminine, might perhaps be classed by itself, as the demonstrative pronoun and some other parts of speech assume unusual forms when agreeing with it.

There are two numbers, singular and plural, which are marked by variations in the termination of nouns. In verbs and pronouns there are some indications of reduplication being used to indicate plurality. Nouns are not susceptible to any inflexions to mark the cases, or, with few exceptions, to mark the gender. In the following words the spelling of the nouns is slightly changed to denote something of a weak or diminutive nature.

Masculine.	Feminine.
Ol-oiboni, the medicine-man.	En-aibon, the medicine.
Ol-oirien, the wild olive-tree.	Eng-oien, the small wild olive-tree.
Ol-ōwaru, the beast of prey, the snatcher.	Eng-ōwayu, the small beast of prey.
Ol-ōwara, the man with a piece cut off the ear.	E-wara, the ox with a piece cut off the ear.
Ol-alashe, the brother.	E-wayā, the child with a piece cut off the ear.
Ol-lee, the man.	Eng-anashe ¹ , the sister.
Ol-arus, the black and white bull.	E-yā, the male (used in a deprecatory sense).
	Eng-ayus, the black and white cow.

There are also a few instances of a diminutive form being made from feminine words. This is done by omitting or altering a consonant in the body of the noun.

E-ñgorōyōni, the woman.	E-ñgoōyōni, the female (used in a deprecatory sense).
En-gerai, the child.	En-gelai ² , the small child.
Enna-loñgo, this shield.	Enna-oñgo ³ , this small or bad shield.
Enna-tito, this girl.	Enna-ito ³ , this little girl.

THE ARTICLE.

The masculine article is ol in the singular, il in the plural; the feminine article is en in the singular, in in the plural. When preceded by a word ending in a vowel, or at the commencement of sentences if followed by a word beginning with a vowel, the i of the plural article is dropped. The ì of the plural feminine article is also dropped at the commencement of sentences, when followed by a word beginning with a consonant. It is possibly partly due to this omission

¹ In this word the change of l to n to distinguish between the masculine and feminine genders appears to go beyond the article.

² This form is rarely used except in the vocative case.

³ These words are not employed with the article in the nominative case.

of the vowel in certain cases that the masculine plural form is sometimes, but incorrectly, written el, which sound is, however, never used in this sense.

The article is separable from the substantive, and in certain cases is not employed; but whenever it is joined to its noun, the two words are spoken as one, and were it to be omitted, the speaker would not be understood. The various changes of letters given on pages 6 and 7 take effect at the beginning of a word after the consonant of the article.

Before e, i, r, s, and y, the l of the masculine article is dropped: e.g. o-engat, the (male) wildebeest; o-inoti, the foster-son; o-rēgie, the (broad) path; o-soit, the (large) stone; o-yōyai, the (male) porcupine.

When the masculine article is prefixed to a word beginning with sh, this sound changes to ch: e.g. elle-shōkut, this herdsman; ol-chōkut, the herdsman.

The n of the feminine article falls out before nouns commencing with e, i, m, ñg, ny, r, s, u, w, and y: e.g. e-engat, the (female) wildebeest; e-inoti, the foster-daughter; e-mootyan, the quiver; e-ñgwēsi, the wild animal; e-nyawa, the udder; e-rēgie, the (narrow) path; e-soit, the (small) stone; e-uaso, the river; e-wēji, the place; e-yōyai, the (female) porcupine.

When the first letter of the substantive is a or o, the feminine article generally becomes eng: e.g. eng-aji, the hut; eng-oñgu, the eye. There are, however, some exceptions, for instance: en-amughe, the sandal; en-oret, the palate. In one or two cases the g may be added or not as the speaker wishes: e.g. en-atīni or eng-atīni, the story. In a few words the n is dropped: e.g. e-or, the dry plot of land; e-oret, the sign; e-arai, the murder.

The feminine article becomes eñg before substantives commencing with go: e.g. eñg-gōlon, the power; eñg-goro, the anger; eñg-gōgoñgi, the evil.

With substantives commencing with l the n of the feminine article is assimilated, the double consonant being distinctly pronounced: e.g. el-lughunya, the head; el-lejare, the lie.

Before b the n becomes m, and also before p, v, and w, these letters at the same time changing to ḥ: e.g. em-bene, the bag; em-bata, the bank; em-ḥolos, the loin, the middle (enna-ḥolos, or enna-ḥolos, or enna-ḥolos, this loin); em-ḥidiñg, the nape of the neck (enna-pidiñg, or enna-ḥidiñg, or enna-ḥidiñg, this nape of the neck).

Substantives commencing with gh, k, t, and sh, change these letters when following the feminine article to g, g, d, and j respectively; e. g. enna-ghīyo, this damsel; en-gīyo, the damsel; kitok, big; en-gitok, the big woman, the wife; enna-tomes, this camel; endomes, the camel; enna-shōkut, this herds woman; en-jōkut, the herds woman.

Although as a rule a noun is unintelligible without the article, the place of the article can be taken by a demonstrative pronoun; by the indefinite pronouns likae, &c., other, and pōki, each; by the interrogative pronoun kal, &c., which?; and by the numeral ōbo, &c., one. Examples:

Ledo-tuñgani, that man.	Likae-tuñgani, another man.
Pōki-tuñgani, each man.	Kal-tuñgani? which man?
	Ōbo-tuñgani, one man.

The other cases in which the article is not used are as follows:

1. When the meaning is motion to or from, or resting at, a kraal or hut (similar to our phrases to or from town, or at home, or the German nach or zu Hause), no possessive case being used. Examples:

A-lo añg, I am going to the kraal (lit. I go kraal).
 A-iñgu-a añg, I come from the kraal (lit. I leave thither kraal).
 A-tii añg, I am in the kraal (lit. I am there kraal).

But

A-lo eng-añg ai, I am going to my kraal.
 A-iñgu-a eng-añg ai, I come from my kraal.
 A-tii eng-añg e-yēyo, I am in mother's kraal.

2. When the time of day is expressed in such sentences as, 'When it became evening,' Ōre p' e-aku teipa (not en-deipa), and 'Now in the morning he went away,' Ōre tadēkenya n-e-lo (not en-dadēkenya).

3. When the substantive is used in a general or abstract sense. Examples:

A-dol tōki (not en-dōki).	I see something.
Mira shata (not ol-chata) ōmut en-gima.	You are not firewood that the fire burns (Proverb No. 62).
Menyanyuk puan o kää (not en-ñuan o en-gää).	Life and death are not alike (Proverb No. 47).
Erisyo laikin o kää (not 'l-laikin o en-gää).	Defeat and death are similar (Proverb No. 14).
Ol-ōbore ayok (not 'l-ayok).	He who has many sons (Proverb No. 64).

4. When the substantive is used as an adverb or in an adverbial sense. Examples:

A-tii keper (not en-geper).	I am above.
A-lo wēji (not e-wēji).	I am going somewhere.
E-tii atwa (not en-atwa).	He is within.

5. In the singular of a few compound words. Examples:

Kutuk-aji, the door (lit. mouth-hut).
Tasat-aina, the man with the withered arm (lit. thin-arm).

In the plural, however, the article is always employed. Example:

'N-gutukie-oo-'ng-ajjik, the doors (lit. the-mouths-of-the-huts).

A few substantives never take the article. Such are:

Ñgania, so-and-so, such-a-one.
Añgata, the plain.
Kulle (in compound words, alle), milk.
Shoo, the grazing ground.
Kishōmi ¹ , the gate.
Kishwaini ² , the coast (Mombasa).
Kitala, the refuge.

The words father and mother are also used without the article. Papa and yēyo³ are employed when talking of one's own parents, and menye and ñgoto when referring to other people's.

The article, as has been stated, must in ordinary cases be prefixed to the noun; and an adjective, when used as an attribute, follows the noun without the article. Thus:

Ol-tuñgani kitok, the big man.
'N-dōkitin kumok, the many things.

It is, however, sometimes permissible to insert the adjective between the article and the substantive, and one may say:

Ol-kitok-tuñgani, the big man.
'N-gumok-tōkitin, the many things.

The article is frequently used in compound words without any substantive, and practically takes the place of affixes used in Aryan languages to form derivatives.

¹ En-gishōmi, i. e. kishōmi preceded by the article, means the clan or family.

² Kishwaini is doubtless a corruption of Kisauni, the Swahili name for Frere Town.

³ Mame is also occasionally used for mother.

Examples :

Ol-le-'ng-aina (the-of-the-hand¹), the elephant.

Ol-lo-'l-masi (the-of-the-mane), the lion.

Ol-le-'l-lughunya (the-of-the-head), the brain.

Ol-le-yēyo } (the-of-mother), { the brother.

En-e-yēyo } { the sister.

En-e-'n-dambu (the-of-the-dappled-grey), the dappled grey's calf.

Ki-ndér ol-le-'modai, pe ki-ndō-kí ol-le-'ñgēno (we begin the-of-the-foolishness, and we do again the-of-the-wisdom), we become wise by experience (Proverb No. 29).

E-nyanyuk ol-o-ipot-ōki o ol-ō-ēuo openy (they resemble the-who-was-called and the-who-came-alone), there is no difference between the man who was called and he who came alone (Proverb No. 8).

Ol-le-'ñgae ? (the-of-who), whose ?

Ol-le-imyet (the-of-five), the fifth.

CASES.

Nouns in Masai are not susceptible of any inflexions to mark the cases ; but the article has special forms to denote the nominative, vocative, and genitive. The accusative case is the same as the nominative. A local case which also sometimes affects the article is equivalent to the English prepositions at, by, for, from, in, off, on, out, to, and with.

THE VOCATIVE.

The vocative case only affects the article. The masculine article becomes, in both the singular and plural, li before substantives commencing with a and o, and le before other letters.

Li-oiboni ! O (the) medicine-man !

Le-soit ! O (the) stone !

Le-lewa ! O (the) men !

The vocative of the feminine article is na in both numbers.

Na-kerai ! O (the) child !

Na-kerā ! O (the) children !

Na-Ai ! O (the) God !

When followed by the possessive pronoun the article rarely takes the vocative form. Example :

Ol-oiboni lai ! O (the) my medicine-man !

It is, however, permissible to say Li-oiboni lai !

It is also possible to use the nominative for the vocative when there is no possessive pronoun, especially if the substantive is not the first word in the sentence :

¹ Cp. the Sanskrit hasta, a hand ; hastin (i), an elephant.

Aaōmon, eng-Ai ! I pray to thee, O God !

In the word tito (ol-tito, the son ; en-dito, the daughter, or the girl), the first t is dropped in the feminine vocative case :

Na-ito ! O (the) girl !

In one or two rare instances, when the feminine article is eng, the vocative case is expressed by k :

K-ōgho ! O (the) grandmother ! (eng-ōgho, the grandmother).

K-onyek ! O (the) eyes ! ('ng-onyek, the eyes).

The commonest way of addressing an equal is by the use of the word E-iro in the masculine and Na-iro in the feminine. This can best be translated by Friend. 'L-oiye and Na-toiye, or Na-ñigorōyok, are used in the plural.

A superior is addressed by the words Le-paiyan ! O (the elder) ! Le-móruo ! O (the) old man ! or Papa-i ! Father-thou ! if a man ; and by Na-kitok ! O (the) big woman ! or Yēyo ! mother ! if a woman.

THE GENITIVE.

There are three methods of forming the genitive case in Masai.

The first is employed when the governed word is a substantive (not preceded by the article), a pronoun, or other part of speech ; the other two are in connexion with the article.

1. In the first or regular form the word governed follows the governing substantive, being joined to it by the particle le, if the nominative is masculine (li before a and o), and e, if feminine. This particle does not vary in number. Examples :

Ol-alem le-papa, father's sword.

Eng-aji e-yēyo, mother's hut.

'L-alema le-papa, father's swords.

'Ng-ajjik e-yēyo, mother's huts.

Ol-chore le-pōkin, the friend of all.

E-mōti e-kulle, the milk-pot.

'L-omon li-opa, the news of formerly (i. e. of former times).

'L-omon li-akenya, the news of presently (i. e. of the future).

2. The possessive case in conjunction with the article is usually formed in the following manner :

The substantive in the genitive case follows the governing word, the article of the former drops its vowel, and a particle is interposed between the nominative and genitive. The form of the particle is determined by both nouns, but it is in the same number as the governed noun. When the nominative and genitive are both masculine, lo is used as the possessive sign in the singular, and loo in the plural; when the nominative is feminine and the genitive masculine, o is employed in the singular, and oo in the plural; when both nouns are feminine, the singular possessive particle is e, and the plural oo; and when the nominative is masculine and the genitive feminine, le is the singular form, and loo the plural.

There appears to be some connexion between this form of the genitive and the conjunction and, which is o when followed by a singular substantive, and oo when followed by a plural.

In the following table the similarity between the two forms is shown :

The bone of the boy,
Ol-oito lo-'l-ayōni.

The bones of the boy,
'L-oik lo-'l-ayōni.

The bone of the boys,
Ol-oito loo-'l-ayok.

The bones of the boys,
'L-oik loo-'l-ayok.

The thing of the boy,
En-dōki o-'l-ayōni.

The things of the boy,
'N-dōkitin o-'l-ayōni.

The thing of the boys,
En-dōki oo-'l-ayok.

The things of the boys,
'N-dōkitin oo-'l-ayok.

The thing of the child,
En-dōki e-'n-gerai.

The things of the child,
'N-dōkitin e-'n-gerai.

The thing of the children,
En-dōki oo-'n-gera.

The things of the children,
'N-dōkitin oo-'n-gera.

The bone and the boy,
Ol-oito o ol-ayōni.

The bones and the boy,

The things and the child,
'N-dōkitin o en-gerai.

The thing and the children,
En-dōki oo 'n-gera.

The things and the children,
'N-dōkitin oo 'n-gera.

The bone of the child,
Ol-oïto le-'n-gerai.

The bones of the child,
'L-oïk le-'n-gerai.

The bone of the children,
Ol-oïto loo-'n-gera.

The bones of the children,
'L-oïk loo-'n-gera.

The bone and the child,
Ol-oïto o en-gerai.

The bones and the child,
'L-oïk o en-gerai.

The bone and the children,
Ol-oïto oo 'n-gera.

The bones and the children,
'L-oïk oo 'n-gera.

3. The second way of forming the possessive case in conjunction with the article is to place the governing word after the governed, the article of the former being at the same time twice expressed, once before the genitive particle, and once connected with its substantive. This form is mostly used when it is wished to put special stress on the genitive. If no ambiguity is likely to occur, the governing word may be omitted, the first article, however, being retained.

The following example is taken from the story of the ostrich chicks :

N-ē-urē-yu 'l-aigwenak pōkin ē-jo 'n-e-'sidai 'n-gera, n-ē-jo 'n-o-'l-figatuny. And the counsellors all fear to say the-of-the-ostrich the children, and they say the-of-the-lion.

THE LOCAL CASE.

There are two ways of forming the local case, which is used where a preposition is required in English.

The first is employed with substantives not joined to the article, and with pronouns and other parts of speech; the second is used in connexion with the article.

1. The regular method of forming the local case is by prefixing the particle te (ti before words commencing with a or o) to the governed word. This particle is invariable :

E-ita-u-o te-kulle, he took it out of the milk.

E-ton ti-aulo } (he is sitting down in outside-the-kraal) { he is sitting or } down out-
E-ton te-boo } (he is sitting down in outside-the-hut) { side.

E-tō-niŋg-o ti-atwa a-jo e-tu-puk-u-o eŋg-gōlon te-ninye, he felt in himself that his strength departed from him.

E-ti-aka ōbo te-lello a-jo, one of (or from) these (men) told him that.

2. The particle indicating the local case used in conjunction with the article is formed like the genitive masculine particle, the only difference being that t is employed for l.

In other words, o is added to t when the word governed is masculine singular, e when feminine singular, and oo when masculine or feminine plural.

Examples :

E-ton to-'l-ayōni, he sits by the boy.

Te-'m-bolos e-'n-gewárie, in the middle of the night.

E-ta-do-iyē too-'soito, he fell on the stones.

E-pwōnu too-'ng-álōli pōkin, they come from all sides.

SUBSTANTIVES.

Many substantives are derived from verbal roots. The most usual method of forming nouns from verbs is by prefixing oi, a, or k to the root, if the latter commences with any letter except i, and by prefixing a or k if it begins with i. Various letters or syllables are also generally added, ni being frequently affixed when the sense is active, t or ti when passive. Examples :

Ol-oiboni, the medicine-man, derived from -bon, to make medicine.

Ol-areshōni, the trapper, derived from -resh, to trap.

Ol-kuret, the coward, derived from -ure, to fear.

Ol-aidetidetani, the dreamer or prophet, derived from -idetidet, to dream.

En-gias, the work, derived from -ias, to do.

En-girukoto, the reply, derived from -iruk, to reply.

Substantives are also sometimes formed by simply affixing letters to the verbal root. Examples :

Em-barnore, the shaving,

Ol-barnoti, the young warrior, i. e. the shaved one¹,

Em-barnat, the stone house,

El-lejare, the lie, derived from -lej, to deceive.

E-sidanishu, beauty, derived from -sidanu, to be beautiful.

En-jiñgata, the entrance, derived from -jiñg, to enter.

THE PLURAL OF SUBSTANTIVES.

Perhaps the most complicated part of the Masai language is the formation of the plural of substantives.

For convenience sake substantives are divided into six classes in this grammar. The two largest groups are those substantives which form the plural by affixing i or n to the singular. The general rule is that i is added to singulars terminating in a consonant, and n to those terminating in a vowel. The third class consists of words which add k to the singular, or change the last two or three letters into k, ak, ek, &c. In the fourth and fifth classes the singular appears to be formed from the plural by affixing i or ni, and a or o. In the sixth class there is no change.

The plural of papa and menye, father, and of yēyo and ñgoto, mother, are formed by prefixing loo and noo to the singular.

Loopapa lainei, my fathers. Nooyēyo ainei, my mothers.
Loomenye, the fathers. Nooñgoto, the mothers.

CLASS I.

Examples of substantives which end in a consonant and form their plural by affixing i to the singular :

Singular.	Plural.	English.
E-mulug	I-mulugi ¹	The hollowed out place.
Ol-kuruk	Il-kuruki	The crow.
En-gijipuruk	In-gijipuruki	The reed-buck.
En-diol	In - diōli	The gun.
E-sipil	I-sipili	The blade, barb.
En-dim	In - dimi	The wood.
Ol-kurum	Il-kurumi	The lower part of the back.
Ol-osōwan	Il-osōwani	The buffalo.
Eñg-gōlon	Iñg-gōloni	The power, authority.
Eng-oloñg	Ing-oloñgi	The day, sun.
En-gidoñg	In-gidoñgi	The quiver, honey-box, medicine-man's horn.
En-dasing	In-dasingi	The sneeze.
E-muny	I-munyi	The rhinoceros.
Ol-oip	Il-oipi	The shade, shadow, picture, or photograph.
En-dap	In-dapi	The palm of the hand.
Ol-poror	Il-porori	The generation, age.
Ol-korikor	Il-korikori	The hartebeest.
Em-ḃolos	Im-ḃolosi	The loin, the middle.
Ol-perangash	Il-perangashi	The upper arm.
En-dabash	In-dabashi	The bedstead (lit. the breadth).
E-makat	I-makati	The salt.

EXCEPTIONS—CLASS I.

A.

Some substantives ending in a consonant, and especially those which have s as the final letter, form their plural by adding in to the singular.

¹ The plural article has been purposely given in its full form, though in many places the vowel would fall out in conversation; thus, the hollows would be pronounced Mulugi, not I-mulugi, unless the word preceding it terminated in a consonant.

Examples :

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-wargas	Il-wargasin	The Grant's gazelle.
Ol-kaldes	Il-kaldesin	The ape.
En-domes	Il-domesin	The camel.
En-gias	In-giasin	The work.
Ol-kinos	Il-kinosin	The crocodile.
Ol-kinyañig	Il-kinyañigin }
E-semingor	I-semingorin	The serval cat.
En-derash	In-derashin	The jackal.
O-engat	I-engatin	The wildebeest.
E-ruat	I-ruatin	The bed.
Ol-kirisiet	Il-kirisietin	The hammer.

B.

Many substantives which end in t form their plural by adding a to the singular. In the following lists examples are given of substantives which form their plurals regularly by adding i and irregularly by adding a.

Substantives forming their plural by adding i :

Eng-anyit	Ing-anyiti	The honour, punishment.
Em-barnat	Im-barnati	The stone house.
Em-boüt ¹	Im-boüti	The trench.
Ol-chökut	Il-chökuti	The herdsman.
En-giañget	In-giañgeti	The breath.
En-gininyeret	In-gininyereti	The drop of perspiration.
En-gioget	In-giogeti	The hiccough.
En-giroget	In-girogeti	The cough.
Ol-kerenget	Il-kerengeti	The fort, trap.
Ol-kökwet	Il-kökweti	The furnace.
Ol-kulet	Il-kuleti	The bladder.
Ol-kuret	Il-kureti	The coward.
E-makat	I-makati	The salt.
O-sumbat	I-sumbati	The invalid.
Ol-tasat	Il-tasati	The old (thin) man.

Substantives forming their plural by adding a :

En-aret	In-areta	The weapon.
Ol-choruet ²	Il-chorueta	The friend.
Ol-kitepet	Il-kitepeta	The top edge of the ear.
Ol-kiharet	Il-kihareta	The thorn.
Ol-lañget	Il-lañgeta	The bridge.
Ol-lepet	Il-lepeta	The armet.
E-nyirt	I-nyirta	The gum in front of the mouth.
Ol-oreshet	Il-oresheta	The calf of the leg.

² Also Ol-chore, il-choreta.

Singular.	Plural.	English.
E-oret	I-oreta	The sign.
E-repilet	I-repileta	The axe.
O-reiet	I-reieta	The river.
E-remet	I-remeta	The spear.
E-seret	I-sereta	The chalk painted on the body.
E-sisinet	I-sisineta	The bundle of grass, mattress.
Ol-tulet	Il-tuleta	The bottle-shaped gourd.

A few substantives which end in t also form their plural by adding o to the singular, and in one instance it is changed to o:

En-derit	In-derito	The dust.
E-murt	I-murto	The neck.
O-soit	I-soito	The stone.
En-dölit	In-dölo	The marrow.

C.

Some substantives other than those ending in t form their plural by adding a or o. Examples:

Ol-alem	Il-alema	The sword.
En-gerr	In-gerra	The sheep.
E-rug	I-ruga	The hump.
Ol-ñgejep	Il-ñgejepa	The tongue.
Ol-bitir	Il-bitiro	The pig.
Ol-kekun	Il-kekuno	The bank of a river.
E-ñgony	I-ñgonyo	The artery.
Ol-ñgatuny	Il-ñgatunyo	The lion
Ol-gos	Il-goso	The throat.

CLASS II.

Examples of substantives which terminate in a vowel and form their plural by adding n to the singular:

O-singa	I-singan	The slave.
En-gurma	In-gurman	The plantation, flour.
E-munge	I-mungen	The anklet.
Ol-orere	Il-oreren	The people, tribe.
Ol-ari	Il-arin	The year.
E-siangiki	I-siangikin	The young woman.
Ol-toilo	Il-toilon	The voice.
Ol-osho	Il-oshon	The country, tribe.
Ol-arau	Il-araun	The broom.
Ol-kumbau	Il-kumbaun	The tobacco.

A number of animals and a few birds also belong to this class and form their plural in the regular manner. The following list gives some instances :

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Em-bárie	Im-bárien	The wild cat.
Em-barta	Im-bartan	The horse.
Ol-bua	Il-buan	The oribi.
En-dua	In-duan	The frog ¹ .
En-gitōjo	In-gitōjon	The hare.
En-gōmani	In-gōmanin	The Kirk's gazelle.
En-gurlee	In-gurleen	The partridge.
Ol-kipulege	Il-kipulegen	The water-buck.
Ol-kondi	Il-kondin	The hartebeest.
Ol-koroi	Il-koroin	The Colobus monkey.
Ol-maalo	Il-maalon	The greater kudu.
Ol-makau	Il-makaun ²	The hippopotamus.
E-nyau	I-nyaun	The cat.
Ol-oilii	Il-oiliin	The Thomson's gazelle.
E-rongo	I-rongon	The reed-buck.
O-yōyai	I-yōyain	The porcupine.

EXCEPTIONS—CLASS II.

A.

Some substantives which terminate in a vowel (other than i) form their plural by adding i to the singular, or more frequently still ni, whilst a few add in.

Examples of substantives which terminate in a vowel and add i :

O-sírua	I-síruai	The eland antelope.
E-rēgie	I-rēgiei	The path.
Ol-aro	Il-aroi	The ox with the crumpled horn, buffalo.
En-joro	In-joroi	The spring.
El-loĩgo	Il-loĩgoi	The shield.
Eng-ōgho	Ing-ōghoi	The grandmother, old woman.
Ol-oro	Il-oroi	The he-goat.
O-sero	I-seroi	The forest.

Examples of substantives which terminate in a vowel and add ni to the singular :

En - aiposha	In - aiposhani	The lake.
Ol-gilisho	Il-gilishōni	The armllet.
Ol-kelesure	Il-kelesureni	The guinea fowl.
Ol-kila	Il-kilani	The garment, cloth.
Ol-kimasaja	Il-kimasajani	The hornbill.
Ol-mesera	Il-meserani	The baobab.
Ol-oirirua	Il-oiriruani	The spirit, mad-person.

¹ En-dua also means the pregnant woman.

² Also il-makain.

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-orora	Il-ororani	The crowd.
O-sararua	I-sararuani	The navel.
E-ülülü	I-ülüluni	The pit.

A few words introduced from Bantu languages form their plural in the same way :

En-giondo	In-giondōni	The basket.
El-lukungu	Il-lukunguni	The fowl.
E-mugonda	I-mugondani	The flour.
Ol-musalala	Il-musalalani	The banana plant.

Examples of substantives which terminate in a vowel and add in to the singular :

Ol-dia	Il-dia ⁿ	The dog.
E-mwa	I-mwa ⁿ	The sort, kind.
Ol-limwa	Il-limwa ⁿ	The whirlwind.

B.

A few substantives which have i as the final letter form the plural by changing i into n, and in one instance i is changed into ni :

E-sunii	I-sunin	The madoqua.
E-sidai	I-sidan	The ostrich.
O-sōyai	I-sōyan	The brass or copper wire.
Ol-tarakwai	Il-tarakwan	The juniper tree.
E-musetai	I-musetani	The bead.

C.

Some substantives terminating in a vowel, and particularly those ending in i, form their plural by adding o or to to the singular, or by changing the last letter into o, &c. Examples :

Ol-mōti	Il-mōtio	The tobacco pipe.
E-mōti	I-mōtio	The cooking pot.
Ol-kunōni	Il-kunōno	The smith.
Ol-chōni	Il-chonito ¹	The ox hide.
En-jōni	In-jonito	The piece of hide.
Ol-pukuri	Il-pukurto	The gourd.
Ol-kipiei	Il-kipio	The lung.
Ol-ashē	Il-ashō	The calf.
Eng-oje	Ing-ojio	The animal which has just given birth.
En-dōlu	In-dōluo	The axe.

D.

Substantives with the terminal letter e not infrequently form their plural by adding a preceded by a consonant or by changing the e to o or a joined to another letter.

¹ Or more commonly il-onito.

Examples :

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-alashe	Il-alashera	The brother.
Eng-anashe	Ing-anashera	The sister ¹ .
E-ñgape	I-ñgapeta	The post.
O-sarge	I-sargeta	The blood.
Ol-bae	Il-baa	The matter, action.
Em-bae	Im-baa	The arrow.
En-amughe	In-amugha	The sandal.
Ol-ñgojine	Il-ñgojīnia	The hyena.
Ol-bene	Il-benīa	The bag.
En-gāne	In-gānda	The cord (made of skin).
Ol-lee	Il-lewa	The male.

To this list may be added some verbal nouns terminating in are ².

Examples :

El-lejare	Il-lejāria	The lie.
El-lidare	Il-lidāria	The knotting together, the harvest.

A few substantives ending in other vowels form their plural in the same way. Examples :

Ol-oikulu	Il-oikulia	The breast of a dead ox, the happiness.
En-dauwo	In-dauwa	The heifer.
Ol-asurai	Il-asuria	The snake.
Ol-marei	Il-mareita	The family.

A few nouns belonging to the first two classes form their plural by adding ite ³ to the singular. Examples :

Eng-añg	Ing-añgite	The kraal.
Eng-omom	Ing-omomite	The face.
Em-boo	Im-booite	The herd.
En-gima	In-gimaite	The fire.
Ol-moñgo	Il-moñgoite	The scrap, broken piece.
E-nyawa	I-nyawaite	The udder.

Others which terminate in n form their plural by adding ito.

Examples :

Ol-oirien	Il-oirienito	The wild olive-tree, the log of wood, the heart of a tree.
Ol-tiren	Il-tirenito	The place outside the fire.
Ol-piron ⁴	Il-pironito	The hard stick used for producing fire.

² Most verbal nouns terminating in are form their plural regularly by adding n, e.g. En-gurare ; pl. In-guraren, the grave.

³ This sound is sometimes pronounced itye, e.g. Ing-añgitye.

⁴ Not to be confounded with ol-piro (pl. il-piron), the hyphæne palm.

A certain number of substantives form their plural by adding shi, ishi, sin, and shin to the singular. Examples:

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-oitigo	Il-oitigōshi	The zebra.
Ol-amuye	Il-amuyeishi	The male donkey.
E-morlo	I-morloishi	The sinew.
E-mwinyua	I-mwinyuaishi	The liver.
Ol-oikuma	Il-oikumaishi	The tortoise
Ol-origha	Il-orighaishi	The stool.
E-mala	I-malasin	The gourd.
Ol-kiu	Il-kiushin	The ant-hill.
Ol-turle	Il-turleshin	The green parrot. (Pæocephalus massaicus , Fisch. and Reichen.)

Some substantives form their plural by adding tin or itin to the singular. Examples:

Eng-ai	Ing-aïtin	The god, rain, sky.
En-dōki	In-dōkitin	The thing.
En-gewarie	In-gewariétin	The night.
E-wēji	I-wējitin	The place.
Ol-amēyu	Il-amēyuitin	The famine, hunger.
Ol-apa	Il-apaitin	The moon, the month ¹ .
En-gāa	In-gāaitin	The disease, death.
En-gata	In-gataitin	The time.
En-gigwena	In-gigwenaïtin	The consultation.
En-gijape	In-gijapeitin	The cold, wind.
En-giyo	In-giyoïtin	The little girl.
O-sina	I-sinaïtin	The trouble.
O-singólio	I-singólióïtin	The dance, song.

Several substantives make their plural in two different ways, both forms having apparently precisely the same meaning. Examples:

O-sagām	I-sagāmi or I-sagāmin	The bridge.
Eng-orioñg	Ing-orioñgi or Ing-orioñgite	The back.
En-gulale	In-gulalen or In-gulaletin	The wooden ear-ring.
En-jore	In-jorin or In-joreitin	The raid, war.
Ol-goo	Il-goon ² or Il-goite	The breast.
E-segarua	I-segaruani or I-segaruaitin	The lobe of the ear.
En-dōkōya	In-dōkōyani or In-dōkōyaïtin	The head.
Em-buruo	Im-buruōshi or Im-buruōïtin	The smoke.
Ol-tōme	Il-tōmen or Il-tōmia	The elephant.
En-gishōmi	In-gishōmin or In-jomīto	The clan.
En-gume	In-gumeshi or In-gumeshin	The nose, nostril.
E-muro	I-murōshi or I-murōshin	The hind-leg.

² This word is perhaps the origin of Mount Elgon, which is called by the Masai ol-doinyo loo-'l-goon, the mountain of breasts.

CLASS III.

This group consists of substantives which form their plural in k. In some instances k is simply added to the singular, in others it is preceded by a vowel, and in others again the last two or three letters of the singular are changed into ak, ek, or k. This class includes words indicating (a) states or callings, (b) parts of the body. A few other words also form their plural in the same manner. Examples of the first division :

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-tuŋgani	Il-tuŋganak	The man.
Ol-móruo	Il-móruak	The old man, the husband.
E-ŋgorōyōni	I-ŋgorōyok	The woman, wife.
Ol-akwi	Il-akwiak	The grandfather or grandson.
En-gitok	En-gituak	The wife.
Ol-āputani	Il-āputak	The father or son-in-law.
Ol-āitoriani	Il-āitóriak	The chief.
Ol-aigwenani	Il-aigwenak	The counsellor, spokesman.
Ol-oiboni	Il-oibonok	The medicine-man.
Ol-aōmonōni	Il-aōmonok	The beggar.
Ol-āpurōni	Il-āpurok	The thief.
Ol-aigwetani	Il-aigwetak	The carpenter.
Ol-abarnōni	Il-abarnok	The barber.
Ol-aisinani	Il-aisinak	The poor man.
Ol-asakutōni	Il-asakutok	The wizard.
Ol-asirani	Il-asirak	The decorator, writer.
Ol-airitani	Il-airitak	The herdsman.
Ol-areshōni	Il-areshok	The trapper.
E-mōdooni	I-mōdook	The blind person.
Ol-agilani	Il-agilak	The destroyer, breaker.
Ol-aidetidetani	Il-aidetidetak	The dreamer, prophet.
Eng-apyani	Ing-apyak	The widow.
En-dōmōno	In-dōmōnok	The offspring.

Examples of the second division :

Ol-kimōjino	Il-kimōjik	The finger, toe ¹ .
Eng-aina	Ing-aik	The arm, hand.
En-geju	In-gejek	The leg, foot.
(Ol-keju	Il-kejek	The river.)
Ol-oito	Il-oik	The bone.
E-mōuo	I-mōwarak	The horn.
Eng-oŋgu	Ing-onyek	The eye.

¹ The thumb is called Ol-kimōjino kitok, ol-kimōjino sapuk, or ol-móruo kitok (the big, or fat, finger; or the big old-man); the first finger, Ol-asakutōni or Sagutishoi (the wizard); the middle finger, Ol-kereti (the ring of goat's skin which is worn on this finger); the third finger, Ŋgoto-Kineniya (Kineniya's mother); the little finger, Ol-kimōjino oti (the small finger), Kineniya or En-gilinda (proper names).

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-oisoto	Il-oisotok	The nail, claw.
Ol-oidolōki	Il-oidolok	The elbow.
El-lenywa	Il-lenyok	The long hairs of the tail of a wildebeest or zebra, &c.; the fan made of these hairs.
Examples of other words :
Ol-oiñgōni	Il-oiñgok	The bull, the strong man.
Eng-aji	Ing-ajjik	The family, hut.
Em-beneiyō	Im-benek	The leaf.
Ol-ñganaiyoi	Il-ñganaiyok	The fruit.
Ol-ōwaru	Il-ōwarak	The beast of prey.
E-mōdioi	I-mōdiok	The cow's dung.
Eng-are	Ing-áriak	The water.
Ol-mwoilaa	Il-mwoilak	The beetle.

CLASS IV.

According to another rule which applies fairly regularly to a large class of substantives, the singular appears to be formed from the plural by adding i or *ni*¹. Comprised in this group are the names of tribes, a few communities of people, most insects, some birds and small animals, and a number of words which were probably first known in their collective form. Examples of names of tribes :

Plural.	Singular.	English.
Il-Ashumba	Ol-Ashumbai	The Swahili.
Il-Teñgwal	Ol-Teñgwali	The Nandi.
Il-Kēyu	Ol-Kēyuni	The Elgeyo.
Il-Uasin-gīshu	Ol-Uasin-gīshui	The Gwas Ngishu Masai.
Il-Kume	Ol-Kumei	} The Turkana.
Il-Turkana	Ol-Turkanai
Il-Kamasya	Ol-Kamasyai	The Kamasia.
Il-Kakesan	Ol-Kakesani	} The Lumbwa ² .
Il-Lumbwa	Ol-Lumbwani
Il-Oikop	Ol-Oikopani	} The Lumbwa Masai ³ .
Il-Lumbwa	Ol-Lumbwani

¹ This construction is by no means peculiar to the Masai. In Persian, for instance, i is added to a word to mean one individual, e.g. zan, woman, zani, one particular woman; bacha, a child, bachai, one particular child; bar, time, bari, one time, once.

² A tribe living near the Lake Victoria, whose real name is Kip-sikisi.

³ The Lumbwa Masai, who call themselves 'l-Oikop, and who are often referred to by the Masai proper as 'l-Oogol-ala (the hard teeth), live in German East Africa extending as far south as Mpapua. Their language is almost identical with that of the Masai in British territory, the chief difference being the pronunciation of one or two letters, k being spoken like gh, p being pronounced ɸ or w, and the vowels being softened. There is also a tribe of people called 'l-Oikop (Leukop or Lukob) living at the south end of Lake Rudolf who apparently speak Masai. They were met by Teleki and Höhnel (The Discovery of Lakes Rudolf and Stephanie) and by Wellby (Twixt Sirdar and Menelik).

Plural.	Singular.	English.
Il - Kapiroṇdo	Ol - Kapiroṇdoi	The Kavirondo.
Il - Kōkōyo	Ol - Kōkōyoi	The Kikuyu.
Il - Tupeita	Ol - Tupeitai	The Taveta.
Il - Mosiro	Ol - Mosiroi	The Chaga ¹ .
I - Suk	O - Suki	The Suk.
Il - Torōbo	Ol - Torōbōni	The Dorobo ² .

Examples of names of communities of people :

In - gera	En - gerai	The child.
I - sipōlio	O - sipōlio	The recluse, i. e. a boy who has recently been circumcised.
Il - barnot	Ol - barnoti	The shaved one, i. e. the warrior who has not yet grown pig-tails.
Il - muran	Ol - murani	The warrior.
Il - meek	Ol - meeki	The native, the savage, applied to all Bantu tribes.
Il - omon	Ol - omoni	The stranger.
I - sunguro	O - sunguroi	The hypocrite.
Il - tamweiyai	Ol - tamweiyai	The sick.
Il - Aimer	Ol - Aimeri	The Aimer age ³ .
Il - Aiser	Ol - Aiseri	The Aiser clan (of Masai) ⁴ .

Examples of names of insects, small animals, and birds :

Ing - alao ⁵	Eng - alaōni	The very small ant.
In - darget	En - dargeti	The grasshopper.
In - daritik	En - daritiki	The small bird.
In - diamorgus	En - diamorgusi	The marabou stork.
In - dero	En - derōni	The rat.
Il - kuru	Ol - kurui	The maggot, worm.
Il - lashe	El - lashei	The louse.
Il - masher	Ol - masherī	The tick.
Il - ōtorok	Ol - ōtoroki	The bee.
Il - maat	Ol - maati	The locust.
Il - oiriir	Ol - oiriiri	The lizard.
Il - oisusu	Ol - oisusui	The flea.

¹ Each tribe of the Chaga people (the inhabitants of Kilima Njaro) has a special name; thus, Il-Kilema (sing. Ol-Kilemai), the Kilema.

² Some writers prefer Andorobo and even Wandorobo. The D has been retained at the commencement of the word, as Torobo would not be easily recognized. En-dorōbōni (pl. 'N-dorōbo) is the Masai for the tsetse fly. These words have probably no connexion with dorop, short, as has been occasionally stated. ³ Vide p. 261. ⁴ Vide p. 260.

⁵ Also rarely Ing-alaak. It is perhaps of interest to note that en-dirango, the large reddish-brown ant, called siafu by the coast people, which bites fiercely, is not included in this group, and forms its plural by adding ni to the singular.

Plural.	Singular.	English.
Il-ojoŋga	Ol-ojoŋgani	The fly.
Ing-ojoŋga	Eng-ojoŋgani	The mosquito.
I-samburumbur	O-samburumburi	The butterfly.
I-sarambalan	E-sarambalani	The bat, swallow, swift.
Examples of other words which belong to this class :
Il-airakuj	Ol-airakuji	The kidney.
Il-ala	Ol-alai	The tooth, tusk.
Ing-atambo	Eng-atamboi	The cloud.
Il-til	Ol-tili	The spark, stain.
In-garara	En-gararai	The quill.
In-giporo	En-giporoi	The scar.
In-guruon	En-guruoni	The ash.
Il-keko	Ol-kekoi	The thorn, thorny place.
Il-kidoŋgo	Ol-kidoŋgoi	The tail.
Il-kilileŋg	Ol-kilileŋgi	The sheep's dung.
Il-kiyo	Ol-kiyoi	The tear.
Il-mao	Ol-maoi ¹	The twins.
Il-meneŋga	Ol-meneŋgani	The corpse, spirit.
I-mōsor	E-mōsori	The egg ² .
I-ŋgok	E-ŋgoki	The sin ³ .
Il-ōkidoŋgo	Ol-ōkidoŋgoi	The mud.
Il-paek	Ol-paeki	The grain or cob of maize.
Il-pisya	Ol-pisyai	The chain.
I-seghera	O-segherai	The cowry.
I-seghenge	E-seghengei	The iron wire.
I-suut	E-suuti	The dust.
I-senya	O-senyai	The sand.
Il-tian	Ol-tiani	The bamboo.
Il-tuduta	Ol-tudutai	The boil, abscess.

EXCEPTIONS.

There are only a few exceptions to this rule. They are as follows :

Il-Maasae	Ol-Maasani	The Masai ⁴ .
Il-Aisungun	Ol-Aisungui	} The European ⁵ .
Il-Musungu	Ol-Musungui

¹ Ol-maoi means a child who has a twin brother or sister.

² A large egg-shaped cask used for beer, &c., is Ol-mōsori, pl. Il-mōsorin.

³ An unlucky child, or a dwarf, is E-ŋgoki, pl. I-ŋgokin.

⁵ Europeans, or white people, were formerly called 'L-ōjuju, the hairy ones. This appellation was afterwards changed to 'L-Ailungun, a corruption of the Swahili word Mzungu, which in its turn gave way to the present forms.

Plural.	Singular.	English.
Il-Chumari	Ol-Chumari	} The Somali.
I-Sigiriaishi	O-Sigiriaishi
I-suyan	O-suyai	The wild dog.
Il-munyo	Ol-munyei	The beard.

CLASS V.

In this class, like the preceding one, the singular of substantives appears to be formed from the plural. This is done by the affix a or o.

A large number of words belonging to this class are formed by simply adding at or ot in the plural and ata or oto in the singular to the roots of verbs not commencing with i. With verbs commencing with i the same affixes are made, and k is also prefixed. Other substantives which form the singular by affixing a or o to the plural were probably first known in their collective state.

Examples of substantives made from the roots of verbs not commencing with i:

Plural.	Singular.	Verbal root.	English.
In-duat	En-duata	-dol, -dua	The witness.
In-jiŋgat	En-jiŋgata	-jiŋg	The entrance.
Il-laŋgat	El-laŋgata	-laŋg	The ford.
Il-limot	El-limoto	-lim	The news.
Il-lutot	El-lutoto	-lut	The place to creep through.
I-manyat	E-manyata	-many	The warrior's kraal.
I-nyalat	E-nyalata	-nyal	The mouthful of food, the cud.
I-rishat	E-rishata	-rish	The boundary.
I-roruat	E-roruata	-roru	The foot-print.
I-sirat	E-sirata	-sir	{ The markings, stripes. The letter, bill.
I-sirat	O-sirata
In-demat	En-demata	-tem	The measure.
In-donat	En-donata	-ton	The seat, root.
Il-turot	Ol-turoto	-tur	{ The pond, puddle. The chalk.
In-durot	En-duroto
In-naŋgat	En-naŋgata	-naŋg	The place struck by a club thrown from a distance, the bruise.

Examples of substantives made from the roots of verbs which commence with i:

In-gidimat	En-gidimata	-idim	The being able.
In-gikurukurot	En-gikurukuroto ¹	-ikurukur	The thunder.
In-giŋgasyat	En-giŋgasyata	-iŋgasya	The astonishment.
In-giragat	En-giragata	-irag	The sleeping place, the hospitality.

Plural.	Singular.	Verbal root.	English.
In-girukot	En-girukoto	-iruk	The reply, the belief.
In-gisisat	En-gisisata	-isis	The glory.
In-gisudorot	En-gisudoroto	-isudoo	The secret.
In-gisujat	En-gisujata	-isuj	The cleaning.
In-gitagat	En-gitagata	-itag	The hut in which the elders meet.
In-gitanyanyukot	En-gitanyanyukoto	-itanyanyuk	The parable (lit. the making similar).
In-giterat	En-giterata	-iter	} The beginning.
In-giterunot	En-giterunoto	-iteru
In-gitiñgot	En-gitiñgoto	-itiñg	The end.
In-gityamat	En-gityamata	-ityam	The jumping.

Examples of substantives which form their singular by adding a or o to the plural :

Plural.	Singular.	English.
Il-abur	Ol-abura	The froth.
Il-akir	Ol-akira	The star.
Añgat	Añgata	The plain, wilderness.
Ing-arn	Eng-arna	The name.
Im-bat	Em-bata	The bank of a river.
Im-ḥit	Em-ḥito	The sinew, tendon, bow-string.
Il-chañgit	Ol-chañgito	The wild animal.
In-jañgit	En-jañgito	'A what-d'you-call-it.'
In-daghol	En-daghola	The cheek.
In-dapan	En-dapana	The skin of a goat, sheep, or calf.

In-guñg	En-guñgu		The knee.
Il-ki	Ol-kina		The teat.
In-guk	En-gukuo		The charcoal, soot.

CLASS VI.

There are a few substantives which are unchangeable and have the same form in the singular and plural. Examples:

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-aijolojola	Il-aijolojola	The hartebeest.
Ol-doinyo	Il-doinyo	The mountain.
Ol-kesen	Il-kesen	The cloth for carrying a baby in.
Eng-oitoi	Ing-oitoi	The road.
O-riri	I-riri	The termite.
O-rorei	I-rorei	The word.
Ol-tuli	Il-tuli	The buttock.

SUBSTANTIVES WITH SINGULAR FORM ONLY.

Some substantives have no plural. Examples:

En-aimin, the darkness.	En-gure, the thirst.
Ol-aro, the shame.	Ol-kirōbi, } the fever.
En-giopo, the adultery.	Ol-oirōbi, }
En-gisiūsiu, the wind.	Eng-oilēlio, the dew.
En-gishon, the life, age.	Ol-oijilili, the drop.
En-gitoo, the kingdom, wealth, greatness, age.	Ol-oireriu, the dirt, rust.

To these may be added words ending in -ishu. Examples:

En-sidanishu, the beauty.	En-garsisishu, the kingdom, the riches.
	En-guretishu, the fear.

SUBSTANTIVES WITH PLURAL FORM ONLY.

A few substantives have no form for the singular. Examples:

In-dare ¹ , the flock.	Kulle (in compound words, alle), milk.
In-gulak, the urine.	I-mōtori, soup.
Ing-amulak, the saliva.

IRREGULAR PLURALS.

A certain number of substantives form their plural irregularly. In a few instances different words are apparently used, in others different terminations from those already discussed.

Examples in which different words are used:

Singular.	Plural.
En-giteñg, the ox, cow ² ;	In-gīshu, the cattle, oxen, cows.
Ol-kiteñg, the bullock;	Il-moñgi, the bullocks.
O-sighiria, the donkey;	I-sirkon, the donkeys.
En-dito, the daughter, young girl;	In-doiey, the daughters, girls.

² The cow is usually termed en-giteñg lepoñg, i. e. the female ox.

Singular.

Plural.

En-gop, the land, country ;	In-gwapi, the lands, countries.
Ol-chani, } Ol-chata, } the tree, firewood ;	Il-käk, the trees, firewood.
En-jani, } En-jata, } the small tree, stake ;	In-gäk, the small trees, twigs.

Examples in which unusual terminations are used :

Singular.	Plural.	English.
En-aisho	In-aishi	The honey.
En-aibon	In-aibonoreitin	The medicine, charm.
Eng-álo	Ing-álöli	The direction, place.
Eng-áuo	Ing-ai	The bow.
Ol-buñgae	Il-buñgaiko ¹	The young bull.
En-daa	In-daiki	The food.
En-gine	In-gineji	The goat.
En-giriñgo	In-giri	The animal, the meat.
En-giyok	In-giyaa	The ear.
En-gubis	In-gubisir	The thigh.
En-gutuk	In-gutukie	The mouth.
Ol-kilikwai	Il-kiliko	The messenger, message.
Ol-mañgatinda	Il-mañgati	The enemy.
E-masaíta	I-masaa	The wealth.
E-ñgikitoi	I-ñgik	The human excrement, word of abuse.
E-ñgwenitoi	I-ñgweni	Word of abuse.
E-ñgudi	I-ñgusidin (rarely I-ñgudisin)	The stick.
Eng-oshoghe	Ing-oshua	The belly.
Ol-tau	Il-tauja	The heart, mind, spirit, soul.
Ol-tidu	Il-tidii	The needle.

PLURAL OF COMPOUND WORDS.

Compound words are commonly employed in Masai. They are made either by joining two substantives or a substantive and another part of speech together, or by prefixing the article to the relative connected with the verb. Though the articles and genitive particles are sometimes omitted in the singular, they are all employed in the formation of the plural.

EXAMPLES OF THE FIRST DIVISION.

Kutuk-aji (Mouth-hut)	'N-gutukie-oo-'ng-ajijik (The-mouths-of-the-huts)	The door.
Tasat-aina (Thin-arm)	Il-tasati-'ng-aik (The-thin-the-arms)	The person with a deformed arm.

Singular.	Plural.	English.
Ol-ō-urō-kutuk (The-who-cuts-mouth)	'L-oo-urō-kutukie (The-who-cut-mouths)	The man with the teeth knock- ed out or with the lips cut.
Ol-ō-duñg-ō-aina (The-whom-cut-is-arm)	'L-oo-duñg-ō-'ng-aik (The-whom-cut-are-the-arms)	The one-armed person.
En-na-iba-o-sina (The-which-hates-the-trouble)	'N-ná-iba-'sinaitin (The-which-hate-the-troubles)	The moth.
Ol-ōwaru-keri (The-beast-of-prey-spotted)	'L-ōwarak-kerin (The-beasts-of-prey-spotted)	The leopard.
Ol-ōwaru-kitok (The-beast-of-prey-big)	'L-ōwarak-kituak (The-beasts-of-prey-big)	The lion.
Ol-lo-'l-masi (The-of-the-mane)	Il-loo-'l-masin (The-of-the-manes)	The lion.
En-na-rok-kutuk (The-which-is-black-mouth)	'N-naa-rook-kutukie (The-which-are-black-mouths)	The monkey ¹ .
En-gidas-in-dare (The-sucker-the-flocks)	'N-gidas-in-dare (The-suckers-the-flocks)	The mongoose.
Ol-ō-ado-kiragata (The-who-is-long-sleeping-place)	'L-oo-ado-kiragat (The-who-are-long-sleeping-place)	The giraffe.
Ol-o-ibor-kidoñgoi (The-which-is-white-tail)	'L-oo-ibor-kidoñgo (The-which-are-white-tails)	The wild dog.
Ol-le-'l-lughunya (The-of-the-head)	Il-loo-'l-lughuny (The-of-the-heads)	The brain.
Ol-le-'ng-aina (The-of-the-arm)	Il-loo-'ng-aik (The-of-the-arms)	The elephant.
Ol-o-ñgui (The-who-stinks)	'L-oo-ñgu (The-who-stink)	The Kamba ² .

EXAMPLES OF THE SECOND DIVISION.

Ol-ō-ton-ie-ki (The-which-sat-upon-is)	'L-oo-ton-ie-ki (The-which-sat-upon-are)	The seat, the buttocks.
Ol-ō-un-isho (The-who-sows)	'L-oo-un-isho (The-who-sow)	The sower.
Ol-ō-rip-isho (The-who-sews)	'L-oo-rip-isho (The-who-sew)	The tailor.
Ol-ō-ī-u (The-who-begets)	'L-oo-ī-u (The-who-beget)	The father.
Ol-ō-lubo (The-which-is-not-satisfied)	'L-oo-lubo (The-which-are-not-satisfied)	The impalla antelope.

ADJECTIVES.

There are three classes of words which can be used as adjectives in Masai. The first appears to consist of true adjectives, which were possibly originally all independent substantives, and substantives used in an adjectival sense. They do not indicate gender or class, and agree with the substantive they qualify in number only.

The second class consists of words formed by verbs joined to the relative. When simple neuter verbs are thus employed, the termination in the plural does not alter, the sole change taking place in the relative, which agrees in gender and number with the substantive. With irregular verbs or derivatives the plural termination varies according to the class of verb.

The third class consists of a few words to which is prefixed the genitive particle. They are unchangeable, but the particle agrees in gender with the substantive.

CLASS I.

The same rules for the formation of the plural of adjectives belonging to this class are followed as with substantives, and though the adjective agrees in number with the substantive it qualifies, it does not necessarily take the same plural termination.

When used as an attribute the adjective generally follows the substantive, but it is sometimes inserted between the substantive and the article. Examples:

- Ol-ashe sumbat or o-sumbat-ashe, the sickly calf.
- 'L-asho sumbati or 'sumbati-asho, the sickly calves.
- En-giteñg uas, the striped ox.
- 'N-gishu uasin or 'n-uasin-gishu, the striped cattle.
- Ol-ñgatuny lepoñg, the female lion (lioness).
- Il-ñgatunyo lepoñga, the lionesses.
- Ol-ayōni bōtor, the big boy.
- 'L-ayok bōtoro, the big boys.
- Ol-keju (or e-uaso) ñgiro, the brown river.
- Il-kejek (or 'uason) ñgiroin, the brown rivers.
- En-dito sidai, the beautiful girl.
- 'N-doiye sidan, the beautiful girls.
- Ol-kerr ñgojine, the lame ram.
- Il-kerra ñgojīnia, the lame rams.
- Ol-omoni torono, the bad stranger.
- 'L-omon torok, the bad strangers, the bad news.
- Ol-kila musana, the old garment.
- Il-kilani musan, the old garments.
- Ol-murani bioto, the healthy warrior.
- Il-muran biot, the healthy warriors.

The following are irregular :

Singular.		Plural.		English.
Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.
	Dorop Rongai		Doropu Rongerna	Short. Thin, narrow (in- animate objects).
Oti	Kiti	Ooti ¹	Kutiti	Small. Few.
Ado or ō-ado	Nado		Kuti Adoru	High, long.

Examples :

Il-tuñganak doropu, the short men.
 'Ng-áriak rongerna, the narrow streams.
 Ol-tuñgani oti, the small man.
 Il-tuñganak ooti, the small men.
 E-ñgorōyōni kiti, the small woman.
 'Ñgorōyok kutiti, the small women.
 'Ng-oloñgi kuti, the few days.

When the adjective is used predicatively, it precedes the substantive and article² :

Torono ol-tuñgani, the man is bad.
 Torok il-tuñganak, the men are bad.

CLASS II.

The adjectives belonging to the second class—in reality relatives compounded with verbal forms—follow the substantives they qualify, and agree with them in gender and number :

Ol-murani ō-gol, the warrior who is strong or the strong warrior.
 Il-muran oo-gol, the strong warriors.
 E-ñgorōyōni na-nana, the gentle woman.
 'Ñgorōyok naa-nana, the gentle women.
 E-wēji ne-wañg, the open place.
 'Wējiti nee-wañg, the open places.
 Ol-tuñgani o-ibor, the white man.
 Il-tuñganak oo-ibor, the white men.
 Eng-are na-irōua, the hot water.
 'Ng-áriak ná-irōua, the hot waters.
 E-wēji ne-irōbi, the cold place.
 'Wējiti nee-irōbi, the cold places.

In some cases the verbal part as well as the relative takes plural inflexions :

Ol-doinyo o-rok, the black mountain.
 Il-doinyo oo-rook, the black mountains.

¹ Ooti cannot be used predicatively, and kutiti is employed instead : e. g. kutiti 'l-airakuj, the kidneys are small (vide p. 139).

² In sentences of this kind the demonstrative pronoun generally takes the place of the article : e. g. torono elle-tuñgani, this man is bad.

- En-giteñg na-tua, the dead ox.
 'N-gīshu naa-tuata, the dead oxen.
 En-giriñgo na-tuñgwa, the rotten meat.
 'N-giri naa-tuñgwaita, the rotten meats.
 Ol-kila ò-tarueiye, the spoilt garment.
 Il-kilani oo-tarueitye, the spoilt garments.
 E-wēji ne-nyokye, the red place.
 'Wējitin nee-nyokyo, the red places.
 Ol-chani ò-toyo, the dry tree.
 Il-kāk oo-tōito, the dry trees.

In a few instances the adjective is inserted between the substantive and the article :

- En-na-ibor-tuli (the white buttock), the Thomson's gazelle.
 'L-oo-do-kilani, the blood-red garments (name of a district).
 'L-oo-do-kīshu, the blood-red cattle (name of two clans, vide p. 260).

CLASS III.

The words belonging to this class are merely genitives used as attributes (similar to such expressions as days of old, homme de bien, &c.). They follow the substantive they qualify :

- Eng-aina e-tatēne, the right hand.
 Eng-oitōi e-kedyanye, the left road.
 'L-omon li-opa, the former news.
 'L-omon li-akenya, the future news.
 Il-chañgit le-'n-dim, the wild animals (lit. of the wood).

All adjectives can be used as substantives by prefixing the article.

Examples :

- Ol-oti, the small one, the younger.
 Ol-bōtor, the big one, the elder.
 Ol-o-rok, the black man.
 En-na-rok, the black woman.
 En-e-tatēne, the right (hand).

Two or more adjectives can follow a substantive :

- Ol-kiteñg orok sinyati li-opa, the former black healthy bullock.

If there are two adjectives of the first class qualifying a substantive, one is usually inserted between the article and the substantive, and the other follows the substantive :

- Ol-kitok-tuñgani sapuk, the big, fat man.

When a noun is qualified by an adjective, and followed by a genitive, the genitive precedes the adjective. Examples :

- Eng-anashe o-'l-murani kiti (the sister of the warrior small), the warrior's small sister.
 'Ng-abōbok o-'l-chani naudo (the barks of the tree nine), nine strips of bark of the tree.

THE COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES.

There are not, properly speaking, any degrees of comparison in Masai.

The comparative is represented in several ways.

1. By the use of a-lañg, to cross (a river) or to surpass :

E-melok e-lañg en-aisho (it is sweet, it surpasses honey), it is sweeter than honey.

Sidai enna-tōki a-lañg eng-ae (beautiful this thing to surpass the other), this thing is more beautiful than the other.

E-tii ol-kitok ō-lañg (he is there the big one who surpasses him), there is some one greater than he.

2. By the use of a-lus-oo, to pass thither or to surpass, followed by the local case :

Sidai enna-tōki a-lus-oo te-'ng-ae (beautiful this thing to pass by the other), this thing is more beautiful than the other.

3. By the use of peno, a little more :

I-'ya-u en-dōki kiti peno, bring something a little smaller.

4. By the use of ol-pisyai, the chain, and in this sense possibly, the rest :

E-ata 'n-gishu tomon o ol-pisyai (he has ten cows and the chain), he has more than ten cows.

Á-isho-o 'rupiani ip o ol-pisyai (he gave me 100 rupees and the chain), he gave me over 100 rupees.

More can be translated by likae, &c., other (which see, p. 46), by a-pon, to increase, or by a-itu-lus-oo, to cause to pass :

To-pon-a kulle, i-'ya-u kulye-alle inōno, increase the milk, bring more of thy milk.

E-itu-lus-ori 'ndae (it is made to pass to you), more shall be given you.

The superlative is generally denoted by the use of the adjective in its simple form :

Kiañgae supat? }
Kalo supat? } Who (or Which) is the best?

It can also be translated by an adjectival substantive followed by the local case :

Ninye ol-oti too-'l-muran pōkin (he the small from the warriors all), he is the smallest of all the warriors.

Like the comparative, the superlative can also be expressed by a-lus-oo, followed by the local case, or by a-lañg, particularly by the former :

Supat elle, e-lus-oo te-pôkin (good this one, he passes by all), this one is the best of all.

Supat ledo, kake elle ô-lus-oo te-'supatishu (good that one, but this one who surpasses in goodness), that man is good, but this one is the best.

Supat elle a-lañg pôkin (good this one to surpass all), this one is the best of all.

THE NUMERALS.

Masculine.	Feminine.	English.
Ôbo	Nabo ¹	One.
Aare	Are	Two.
Ôkuni	Uni	Three.
Ooñgwan	Oñgwan	Four.
	Imyet ²	Five.
	Ille ³	Six.
Oopishana	Naapishana	Seven.
	Isyet ³	Eight.
Ôudo	Naudo	Nine ³ .
	Tomon	Ten.
Tomon o ôbo	Tomon o nabo	Eleven.
Tomon o aare ⁴	Tomon o are	Twelve.
Tomon o ôkuni	Tomon o uni	Thirteen.
Tomon o ooñgwan	Tomon o oñgwan	Fourteen.
	Tomon o imyet	Fifteen.
	Tomon o ille	Sixteen.
Tomon o oopishana	Tomon oo naapishana	Seventeen.
	Tomon o isyet	Eighteen.
Tomon o ôudo	Tomon oo naudo	Nineteen.
	Tigitãm	Twenty.
Tigitãm o ôbo	Tigitãm o nabo	Twenty-one.
Osom or 'N-domoni uni		Thirty.
Artam or 'N-domoni oñgwan		Forty.
Onom or 'N-domoni 'myet		Fifty.
Onom oo tomon or 'N-domoni 'lle		Sixty ⁵ .
Onom oo tigitãm or 'N-domoni naapishana		Seventy.
Onom oo 'n-domoni uni or 'N-domoni 'syet		Eighty.
Onom o artam or 'N-domoni naudo		Ninety.

¹ 1 when used with e-wêji, the place, is nêbo.

² The i is sometimes omitted when these words follow a vowel.

³ Endoroj is occasionally used for nine.

⁴ When two numerals are joined by the conjunction and, the double o of the plural is only pronounced if followed by a consonant.

⁵ Often everything above fifty is simply styled ip. If it is desired to express a very large number, ip-ip, one thousand, or le-me-iken-ayu, countless, are used.

Masculine.	Feminine.	English.
Ip		Hundred.
Ip o ōbo		One hundred and one.
Ip o onom		One hundred and fifty.
Ip onom		Five hundred.
Ip-Ip or 'N-domoni ip		One thousand.
Ip-Ip kata-'myet		Five thousand.

With the exception of 1, the number always follows the substantive :

Il-tuñganak aare, two men.

When 1 is placed before the substantive, the article is omitted ; when it follows, the article is retained :

Ōbo-tuñgani or Ol-tuñgani ōbo, one man.

Nabo-oloñg or Eng-oloñg nabo, one day.

The ordinal numbers are expressed by the use of the genitive particle with or without the article :

Ol-tuñgani li-ooñgwan, the fourth man.

Eng-aji e-oñgwan, the fourth hut.

Tapala 'l-tuñganak aare, toriku ol-li-ōkuni (leave two men alone, bring the third), bring the third man.

First and last can both be expressed by Ol-le-bata, the-of-side. First is, however, more usually translated by one of the following :

Ol-le-lughunya, the-of-head.

Ol-o-ituruk, the-who-precedes.

Ol-ō-lus-oo, the-who-passes-by.

Last is translated by Ol-le-kurum, the-of-behind, or Ol-o-iñgopu, the-who-is-behind.

Once, Twice, &c., are denoted by the use of en-gata, the time :

Nabo-kata¹, once, the first time.

Kat'-are, twice.

'N-gataitin are, the second time.

'N-gataitin aja ? how many times ?

'N-gataitin kumok, often.

First of all is translated by a-ñgas a-iter, to commence to begin, or simply by a-ñgas, to commence :

I-ñgas a-iter en-gias, pe ilo, } you must first of all do the work,
I-ñgas en-gias, pe ilo, } then you may go.

The Masai have various finger signs to denote the numerals.

1. The first finger of the right hand is held up and the rest of the fist closed. The hand must be kept still.

¹ The first time can also be rendered by eng-aiter.

2. The outstretched first and second fingers are rubbed rapidly one against the other.

3. The first finger is rested on the thumb and the first joint of the middle finger is placed against the side of the middle joint of the first finger, the other two fingers remaining closed.

4. The fingers are outstretched, the first and middle ones being crossed.

5. The fist is closed with the thumb placed between the first and second fingers.

6. The nail of one of the fingers—generally the ring finger—is clicked three or four times by the thumb nail.

7. The tip of the thumb is rubbed rapidly against the tip of one of the fingers, generally the middle finger, the hand remaining open.

8. The hand is opened and the fingers are either all pressed together or all kept apart. A rapid movement with the hand in this position is then performed, first in a downward and then in an upward direction. This movement is made by the hand only, the wrist acting as lever.

9. The first finger is bent so that the tip touches the tip of the thumb, the other fingers being at the same time opened.

10. The closed fist is thrown out and opened, the nail of the middle finger being at the same time clicked against the tip of the thumb.

20. The open fist is closed and opened two or three times.

30. The fingers are placed in the same position as when representing 1, i. e. the first finger is held up while the rest of the hand is closed. When in this position the hand is shaken slightly from the wrist.

40. The hand is opened, and the first and middle fingers are pressed together, as are also the ring and little fingers, a gap thus existing between the middle and ring fingers. When in this position the hand is shaken.

50. The tip of the thumb is placed between the ends of the first and middle fingers. The other fingers can be opened or closed at the same time.

60. For ip, that is to say anything above fifty, the closed fist is jerked out from the body, the fingers being at the same time opened.

PRONOUNS.

The full forms of the personal pronouns are:

	Singular,		Plural.
I	Nanu	We	Iyook.
Thou	Iye	You	Indae.
He, she, or it	Ninye	They	Ninje.

The second person singular is often contracted into 'ye and occasionally into i. Iyook and Indae become 'yook and 'ndae when following a vowel, or at the commencement of sentences. Unless the subject has been previously mentioned, the demonstrative pronouns are generally used for he, she, it, and they.

The objective cases, me, thee, him, &c., can be expressed by the same forms as those given above for the nominative case, I, thou, &c.

The possessive case, of me, &c., is expressed by the possessive pronouns, or, rarely, by the particle le or e inserted between the substantive and the personal pronoun.

The local case is expressed by the particle te prefixed to the personal pronoun, e. g. e-gol te-ninje, it is hard for them.

The position of the personal pronoun with regard to the verb is given on p. 49.

The personal pronouns when combined with a verb as subject or object are indicated by special prefixes. See p. 48.

POSSESSIVE PRONOUNS.

The possessive pronouns are always placed after the substantive denoting the thing possessed, and vary according to gender and number. They are :

	Singular.		Plural.
	Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.
My	Lai	Ai	Lainei	Ainei.
Thy	Lino	Ino	Linōno	Inōno.
His, her, or its	Lenye	Enye	Lenyena	Enyena.
Our	Lañg	Añg	Lañg	Añg.
Your	Linyi	Inyi	Linyi	Inyi.
Their	Lenye	Enye	Lenye	Enye.

Ol-alem lai, my sword.

'L-alema lainei, my swords.

Eng-alem ai, my knife.

'Ng-alema ainei, my knives.

The words mine, thine, &c., used predicatively or absolutely, take the article. Various prefixes are also added, and changes made, in some of the words, as is shown in the following table :

Mine	Ol-lalai	En-ai	Il-kulainei	In-gunainei.
Thine	Ol-lino	En-ino	Il-kulōnōno	In-gunōnōno.
His, hers, or its	Ol-lenye	En-enye	Il-kulenyena	In-gunenyena.
Ours	Ol-lalañg	En-añg	Il-kulalañg	In-gunañg.
Yours	Ol-linyi	En-inyi	Il-kulinyi	In-guninyi.
Theirs	Ol-lenye	En-enye	Il-kulenyena	In-gunenyena.

'L-alema lenye kullo, kodee 'l-kulōnōno ? these are their swords, where are thine ?

Mi-ar il-asurai, 'l-kulalañg, do not kill the snakes, they are ours.

I-ata 'n-gīshu inōno; e-ata sii ol-oiboni 'n-gunenyena, thou hast thy cattle; the medicine-man also has his.

Sidai en-dōki enye a-lañg en-ai, his thing is better than mine.

There is a short enclitic form of the Possessive Pronoun of the second and third persons, which is used with the words father and mother :

Singular.	Plural.
Minye, thy or your father;	Loominyi, thy or your fathers.
Menye, his, her, or their father;	Loomenye, his, her, or their fathers.
Ñgutunyi, thy or your mother;	Nooñgutunyi, thy or your mothers.
Ñgotonye, his, her, or their mother;	Nooñgotonye, his, her, or their mothers.

The personal pronouns may be added to the possessive pronoun to give emphasis. The word o-sesen, the body, is also sometimes used in this sense :

Eng-alem ai nanu, }
 Eng-alem o-'sesen lai, } my own knife.

DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS.

There are four classes of demonstrative pronouns. The first denotes objects near at hand; the second, objects at a distance; and the third and fourth, objects previously mentioned. They each have forms for the masculine and feminine, and the word e-wēji, the place, requires a special form to be used with it.

Class I.

This or these, of objects at no great distance :

Masculine.	Feminine.	Used with the word e-wēji.	English.
Elle	Enna	Enne	This.
Kullo	Kunna	Kunne or Kunnen	These.

Class II.

That or those or yonder, referring to things at a distance :

Ledo or elde	Enda	Ende	That.
Kuldo	Kunda	Kunde or Kunden	Those.

Class III.

This or these, mentioned before :

Illo	Inna	Inne	This.
Lello	Nenna	Nenne	These.

Class IV.

That or those or yonder, mentioned before :

Masculine.	Feminine.	Used with the word e-wēji.	English.
Lido	Idya	Idye	That.
Lekwa	Nekwa	Nekwe	Those.

When the demonstrative pronoun is joined to a substantive, it takes the place of the article :

Ledo-tuñgani, that man. Enna-kerai, this child.

When used predicatively, the article is retained, and the demonstrative follows the substantive :

Ol-tuñgani ledo, that is the man.
En-gerai enna, this is the child.

In the genitive and local cases the first letter of the demonstrative is omitted if an e :

Ol-origha le-'lle-tuñgani, the stool of this man.
E-gol te-'lle-tuñgani, it is hard for this man.

If it is desired to lay stress on the demonstrative pronoun, the syllable nya, nye, or nyo is prefixed to it. When the demonstrative has taken this form and is joined to a substantive, the article is retained :

Nyelle ol-tuñgani, this man here, this very man.
Nyoolo 'l-tuñganak, these men here.
Nyanna e-ñgorōyōni, this woman here.
Nyonna 'ñgorōyok, these women here.
Nyenpe e-wēji, just this place.

REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS.

Most verbs have a special reflexive form which is much used.

When this form does not exist or is employed for the neuter or quasi-passive, the word kewan is affixed to the verb in the singular and aate in the plural :

A-duñg kewan, I cut (or shall cut) myself.
Ki-dúñg aate, we cut (or shall cut) ourselves.

Self is also occasionally translated by ol-tau, the heart :

E-nyor ol-tau lenye (he loves his heart), he loves himself.

When self is added to a pronoun to express emphasis, it is rendered in Masai by open in the singular, and oopen in the plural :

Ol-tuñgani open, the man himself.
Il-tuñganak oopen, the men themselves.
Nanu open, I myself.
'Yook oopen, we ourselves.

The word owner is translated by open preceded by the article. It is followed by the nominative and not by the genitive as in English :

Ol-open eng-aji, }
 En-open eng-aji, } the owner of the hut.
 'L-oopen ing-ajjik, }
 'N-oopen ing-ajjik, } the owners of the huts.

By myself, by ourselves, &c., are also rendered by open, oopen :
 Nanu open, by myself ; 'Yook oopen, by ourselves.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS.

The relative pronouns have forms appropriate for the masculine and feminine of both numbers. There is also a special form for the word e-wēji, the place :

Singular.			Plural.			English.
Masc.	Fem.	Used with the word e-wēji.	Masc.	Fem.	Used with the word e-wēji.
O ¹	Na	Ne	Oo	Naa ²	Nee	Who, whom, or which.

Ol-tuñgani o-ra³ sapuk, the man who is big.
 E-ñgorōyōni na-ra sapuk, the woman who is big.
 E-wēji ne-ra sapuk, the place which is big.
 Il-tuñganak oo-ra sapuki, the men who are big.
 'Ñgorōyok naa-ra sapuki, the women who are big.
 'Wējitin nee-ra sapuki, the places which are big.

When the negative is combined with the relative, le-me is used for the masculine, and ne-me for the feminine and for the word e-wēji. These forms do not change in the plural :

Ol-tuñgani le-me-ra sapuk, the man who is not big.
 E-ñgorōyōni ne-me-ra sapuk, the woman who is not big.
 Il-tuñganak le-me-ra sapuki, the men who are not big.
 'Ñgorōyok ne-me-ra sapuki, the women who are not big.

The affirmative form of the relative is not divisible from the verb, but the negative form can stand alone ; thus, whilst ol-tuñgani o sapuk⁴ would be meaningless, ol-tuñgani le-me sapuk is as correct as ol-tuñgani le-me-ra sapuk.

To distinguish between the simple relative as subject or object the voice is raised or lowered at the end of the verb. When the relative is the subject, the voice is raised, when the object, it is lowered.

Various changes take place in the form of the relative when it is ¹ The masculine singular relative is generally a long o, thus ō.

² Naa becomes ná before verbs commencing with t.
³ A-a, to be (vide p. 87).
⁴ Ol-tuñgani ō-sapuk-u means, the man will be big (vide p. 87).

the subject, and the object is the first or second person singular (except when the subject is the first person plural); also when it is the object, and the subject is the first or second person singular. These alterations are shown on pp. 50-3.

The possessive form of the relative can be translated by open preceded by the article :

Ol-tuñgani ol-openy in-gīshu, the man whose cattle they are.

INDEFINITE PRONOUNS.

There are two indefinite pronouns. The first, likae, &c., is equivalent to other, another, the one . . . the other, and else; the second pôki, &c., to each, every, all, whosoever, and whatsoever, and in compound words to both, all three, &c.

Likae, &c., other, has different forms for the masculine and feminine, singular and plural. It invariably precedes the substantive, and can be used with or without the article according to the meaning :

Singular.		Plural.
Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.
Likae	Ae	Kulikae	Kulye

Examples :

Likae-tuñgani, another man.

Kulye-ñgorōyok, other women.

Ol-likae-tuñgani, the other man.

'N-gulye-ñgorōyok, the other women.

I-mbot-o ol-likae, call the other one (masculine).

The one . . . the other, is translated by likae . . . likae, ae . . . ae, &c. :

E-tō-ishe eng-ae-ñgorōyōni, na olupī eng-ae, the one woman bore and the other was barren.

E-pwo kulikae, e-pwōnu kulikae, some go and others come.

Else, when joined to somebody, something, or somewhere, is translated by likae, ae, &c. :

E-ēuo likae-tuñgani, somebody else came.

A-shōmo ae-wēji, I went somewhere else.

A-itobir-a ae-tōki, I did something else.

Other is also used for the comparative of adjectives (which see, p. 38).

Each, every, whosoever, and whatsoever, are translated by pôki. When used in this sense, pôki precedes the substantive, and the article is omitted :

E-ēuo pôki-tuñgani, each man came.

E-ētuo pôki-tuñganak, every man came.

E-ētuo te-pōki-wēji, they came from each place.

Ten e-lōtū pōki-tuñgani, ti-aki m-e-shōmo, whosoever (or whatsoever man) comes, tell him to go away.

All is rendered by pōki in the singular, and pōkin in the plural¹. When employed thus, the article is retained, and pōki follows the substantive :

E-ishir-a eng-aji pōki, all the hut wept.

E-ētuo 'l-tuñganak pōkin, all the people came.

Both, all three, &c., are translated as follows :

Masculine.	Feminine.	English.
Pokiraare	Pokirare	Both
Pokirōkuni	Pokirauni	All three.
Pokirooñgwan	Pokiroñgwan	All four.
Pokiraimyet		All five.

E-ētuo 'l-tuñganak pokiraare, both men came.

E-ētuo 'ngorōyok pōkirauni, all three women came.

INTERROGATIVES.

There are two interrogative pronouns that are declinable, (Ki)² añgae, Who? and (K) alo, Which? and one which is indeclinable, (K) ainyō³, What?

Who? is declined as follows :

Singular.		Plural.		English.
Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.
(Ki) añgae		(K) aloo-'ñgae	(K) anoo-'ñgae	} Who? } Whom?
(K) ol-le-'ñgae	(K) en-e-'ñgae	(K) alkul-le-'ñgae	(K) angun-e-'ñgae

Which? What? or What sort of? are rendered as follows :

(K) alo (K) aa (K) akwa.

If the interrogative pronoun is the subject, the verb requires a relative with it; if it is followed by a demonstrative, the verb to be is implied. When Which? is joined to a substantive, the article is omitted:

(Ki) añgae o-tii kishōmi? } (Who [is it] who is there gate?) Who is
 (Ki) añgae na-tii kishōmi? } at the gate?
 (K) aloo-'ñgae oo-tii kishōmi? } Who are at the gate?
 (K) anoo-'ñgae naa-tii kishōmi? }
 (Ki) añgae i-'yēu? Whom do you want?
 (K) ol-le-'ñgae elle-alem? Whose sword is this?
 (K) en-e-'ñgae enna-alem? Whose knife is this?

¹ Pōkin may also be used with a singular substantive: e-ishir-a eng-aji pōkin, all the hut wept.

² K or Ki are often placed before an interrogative.

³ Ainyō, when it stands alone, is generally contracted into 'nyō or 'ya.

- (K) alkul-le-’ngae kullo-alema ? Whose swords are these ?
 (K) angun-e-’ngae kunna-alema ? Whose knives are these ?
 (K) alo-tuñgani o-tii ? Which (or what sort of) man is there ?
 (K) alo-tuñgani elle ? What man is this ?
 (K) aa enna ? What is this ?
 (K) ainyô na-tii ? What is there ?
 (K) ainyô ki-túm ? What (shall) we get ?
 (K) ainyô e-ata kuldo ? (What have those ?) What is the matter with them ?

VERBS.

Verbs in Masai fall into two classes : (a) roots beginning with i or *e*¹, (b) all other roots. There are also numerous derivative forms which may be assumed by most Masai verbs where in English either another verb or some compound expression must be used.

The principal difference between verbs commencing with i or e and those commencing with any other letter is to be found in the past tense and tenses constructed from the past. In the former a vowel only is affixed, and in the latter t and a vowel are also prefixed to the root. Examples :

A-suj, to follow.

A-tu-suj-a, I followed.

A-isuj, to wash.

A-isuj-a, I washed.

When conjugating the verb special prefixes are used to mark the subject. With the exception of the first person plural these prefixes change when the object is the first or second person singular.

When the subject is—

I and the object him, her, us, you, them, &c., or when there is no object, the prefix is A.

I and the object thee, the prefix is Aa².

Thou and the object him, her, us, them, &c., or when there is no object, the prefix is I.

Thou and the object me, the prefix is Ki.

He, she, or it, and the object him, her, us, you, them, &c., or when there is no object, the prefix is E.

He, she, or it, and the object me, the prefix is Aa².

He, she, or it, and the object thee, the prefix is Ki.

We and the object thee, him, her, you, them, &c., or when there is no object, the prefix is Ki.

¹ There appear to be only two verbs which, with their derivatives, commence with e : a-el, to anoint, and a-eañg, to breathe.

² Aa is used for all verbs except those commencing with i, when a slightly accentuated á is employed instead.

You and the object him, her, us, them, &c., or when there is no object, the prefix is I.

You and the object me, the prefix is Ki.

They and the object him, her, us, you, them, &c., or when there is no object, the prefix is E.

They and the object me, the prefix is Aa¹.

They and the object thee, the prefix is Ki.

The following examples will illustrate the use of these prefixes:

Singular.	Plural.
A-suj, I follow him, &c.	Ki-súj, we follow thee, him, &c.
Aa-suj, I follow thee.
I-suj, thou followest him, &c.	I-suj-usuju, you follow him, &c.
Ki-suj, thou followest me.	Ki-suj-usuju, you follow me.
E-suj, he or she follows him, &c.	E-suj, they follow him, &c.
Aa-suj, he or she follows me.	Aa-suj, they follow me.
Ki-suj, he or she follows thee.	Ki-suj, they follow thee.

In the active voice the personal pronoun is often added for emphasis or to prevent ambiguity. It always follows the verb, and is perhaps more frequently used in the objective than in the subjective case. If both are used, the latter precedes the former, except in the use of auxiliary or compound verbs. Examples:

A-ar nanu 'ndae te-'ñgudi, ē-ar ledo 'ndae to-'l-kuma (I-you-strike I you with-the-stick, he-you-strikes that-one you with-the-club), I strike you with the stick, he strikes you with the club.

A-ar nanu 'ndae te-'ñgudi, e-lōtu a-ar indae ledo to-'l-kuma (I-you-strike I you with-the-stick, he-you-comes to-strike you that-one with-the-club), I strike you with the stick, he comes to strike you (or he will strike you) with the club.

If the personal pronoun is used as the indirect object, it precedes the direct object. Example:

A-isho-o 'ndae 'l-alema, I have given you the swords.

When the first person plural is the subject, the last syllable of the verb is slightly accented. The objective personal pronoun is also usually added:

Ki-tu-suj-á 'ye pōkin, we have all followed thee.

Ki-tu-suj-a pōkin, all have followed thee.

There is no difference in pronunciation between Thou hast followed me, He or She has followed thee, and They have followed thee. When however the prefix is aa, i. e. when the subject is I and the object thee, and when the subject is he, she, or they and the object me, a difference in pronunciation is noticeable. In the first case the voice is lowered at the end of the word ; in the latter it is raised.

¹ Aa is used for all verbs except those commencing with i, when a slightly accented á is employed instead.

There is an impersonal form which corresponds to the passive in English. This form is only conjugated in the third person singular, and is generally followed by a personal pronoun :

Aa-suj-i nanu, it is followed to me or I am followed.

Ā-iyōlo-i aa-tu-suj nanu, it is known to be followed to me or I know how to be followed.

The objective prefix is used when anything about the person or thing is about to be stated :

Aa-tu-duŋg-o ol-kimōjīno (he-me-has-cut the-finger), he has cut off my finger.

Ki-ān ing-aik te-kurum (they-thee-bind the-hands at-behind), they will bind thy hands behind thee.

THE RELATIVE.

The relative, as explained above (p. 45), is inseparable from the verb. When it is used, it takes the place of the personal prefixes, and can be employed with the present tenses, with the past, and with the future. It is also used with the passive voice.

If the subject and object are expressed, the former precedes, and the latter follows, the relative and verb. Examples :

Nanu o-nyor ol-tuŋgani, (it is) I who love the man.

Nanu o-nyor-ita ol-tuŋgani, (it is) I who am loving the man.

Nanu ō-to-nyor-a ol-tuŋgani, (it was) I who loved the man.

Nanu o-nyor-u ol-tuŋgani, (it is) I who will love the man.

Ol-tuŋgani o-nyor-i, the man who is loved.

Ol-tuŋgani o-nyor-ita-i, the man who is being loved.

Ol-tuŋgani ō-to-nyor-a-ki, the man who was loved.

Ol-tuŋgani o-nyor-u-ni, the man who will be loved.

The form of the relative changes when it is the subject and the object is the personal pronoun of the first and second person singular (except when the subject is the first person plural), l and n (li and ni before *k*¹) joined to the personal prefixes being substituted for o or oo and na or naa :

Masculine.	Feminine.	English.
Ō-suj	Na-suj	I who follow him, her, you, the thing, &c.
Laa-suj	Naa-suj	I who follow thee.
Ō-suj	Na-suj	Thou who followest him, her, us, &c.
Liki-suj	Niki-suj	Thou who followest me, &c.

¹ li and ni are also sometimes used before in.

Masculine.	Feminine.	English.
Ō-suj	Na-suj	He who follows him, her, us, &c.
Laa-suj	Naa-suj	He who follows me.
Liki-suj	Niki-suj	He who follows thee.
Oo-suj	Naa-suj	We who follow thee, him, you, them, &c.
Oo-suj	Naa-suj	You who follow him, her, us, &c.
Liki-suj-usuju	Niki-suj-usuju	You who follow me.
Oo-suj	Naa-suj	They who follow him, her, us, &c.
Laa-suj	Naa-suj	They who follow me.
Liki-suj	Niki-suj	They who follow thee.

When the relative is the object of the verb, l and n joined to the personal prefixes are employed in place of o or oo and na or naa if the subject is the first and second person singular or plural :

- Ol-tuñgani la-suj, the man whom I follow.
- Ol-tuñgani li-suj, the man whom thou followest.
- Ol-tuñgani ō-suj, the man whom he or she follows.
- Ol-tuñgani liki-súj, the man whom we follow.
- Ol-tuñgani li-suj-usuju, the man whom you follow.
- Ol-tuñgani ō-suj, the man whom they follow.

When, however, there is an indirect object of the first or second person singular, the objective relative in the third person also changes to l or n joined to the personal prefixes.

The following examples show the changes in the relative when there is an indirect object :

- Ol-alem la-isho, the sword which I give to him, &c.
- Ol-alem lá-isho¹, the sword which I give to thee.
- Ol-alem li-njo², the sword which thou givest to him, &c.
- Ol-alem liki-njo, the sword which thou givest to me.
- Ol-alem lá-isho¹, the sword which he, she, or they give to me.
- Ol-alem liki-njo, the sword which he, she, or they give to thee.
- Ol-alem o-isho, the sword which he, she, or they give to him, &c.
- Ol-alem liki-njó, the sword which we give to thee, him, &c.
- Ol-alem li-njō-sho, the sword which you give to him, &c.
- Ol-alem liki-njō-sho, the sword which you give to me.

When there is no antecedent, the article is prefixed to the relative :

Masculine.	Singular. Feminine.	English.
Ol-ō-suj	En-na-suj	He who follows him, her, us, &c.
Ol-laa-suj	En-naa-suj	He who follows me.
Ol-liki-suj	En-niki-suj	He who follows thee.

¹ The lá would be laa before a verb beginning with any other letter.

² Certain changes take place in the spelling of verbs commencing with i (vide pp. 53-5).

Masculine.	Plural. Feminine.	English.
'L-oo-suj	'N-naa-suj	They who follow him, her, us, &c.
Il-laa-suj	'N-naa-suj	They who follow me.
Il-liki-suj	'N-niki-suj	They who follow thee.

Examples :

Ol-o-nyor-i, the (man) who is loved.

En-na-nyor-i, the (woman) who is loved.

E-tua ol-liki-ta-ar-a, he who struck thee is dead.

E-tii 'l-oo-pwōnu oo 'l-oo-pwo (they are there those who come and those who go), people come and go.

E-ibuñg-a ol-amēyu ninye oo 'l-oo-boit-are, hunger seized him and those who were with him.

A-niñg ol-toilo lo-'l-o-ishir, I hear the voice of some one crying.

E-ta-a e-ñgorōyōni en-na-irita 'sirkon, the woman became one who herds donkeys.

Whoever is also often translated by this form of the relative :

E-ar-i ol-ō-jō-ki elle-tuñgani, } whoever tells this man, will be
E-ar-i en-na-jō-ki elle-tuñgani, } beaten.

Adverbs of time or place are treated as relative particles, the letter n being simply added to the personal prefixes. When the antecedent is omitted, the feminine article precedes the word.

The words what or that which, whatever, wherever, and whenever, can be translated in the same way :

A-lo e-wēji n-i-'ñgua, I am going to the place whence thou comest.

A-lo en-n-i-lo, I go whither (or when) thou goest.

A-iyōlo nanu en-n-e-iko, I know what he will do.

A-iyōlo en-dōki n-e-iko, I know the thing that he will do.

En-n-i-'yō-u-u n-a-isho¹, whatever you will wish I shall give you.

En-n-a-ti-jiñg-a pa a-ton, wherever I entered I stayed.

En-n-e-iyō-u n-ē-lo¹, n-a-lo, whenever (or wherever) he wishes to go, I will go.

The relative is often used in Masai where it is not employed in English. Examples :

Añgae ō-lo ? } (Who who is going ?) Who is going ?
Añgae na-lo ? }

Kakwa-tuñganak oo-shōmo ? Which men have gone ?

Il-tuñganak aja oo-shōmo ? How many men have gone ?

M-e-tii ol-tuñgani ō-pik ol-marua ñgejuk atwa 'l-mōsorin musan (it is not there the man who puts the new wine into the casks old), no man putteth new wine into old wine-skins.

¹ The narrative tense (which see, p. 59) follows the verb a-iyō-u, to wish.

Pôki-tuñgani ò-lòtu, whoever may come.

Ol-doinyo o-ibor, the white mountain (Kilima Njaro).

A-ata eng-are na-ok, I have some drinking water.

I-'ya-u ol-origha la-ton-ie, bring me a chair to sit on.

The relative combined with the negative (le-me and ne-me) likewise undergoes changes which are somewhat similar to those already enumerated. Except before mi, when le and ne become li and ni, the changes only affect the particle me.

Examples when the relative is the subject :

Masculine.	Feminine.	English.
Le-me-suj	Ne-me-suj	I who do not follow him, her, &c.
Le-maa-suj	Ne-maa-suj	I who do not follow thee.
Le-me-suj	Ne-me-suj	Thou who dost not follow him, &c.
Li-miki-suj	Ni-miki-suj	Thou who dost not follow me.

Examples when the relative is the object :

Ol-tuñgani le-ma-suj, the man whom I do not follow.

Ol-tuñgani li-mi-suj, the man whom thou dost not follow.

Ol-tuñgani le-me-suj, the man whom he or she does not follow.

Examples when an indirect object is employed :

Ol-alem le-ma-isho, the sword which I do not give to him, &c.

Ol-alem le-má-isho, the sword which I do not give to thee.

Ol-alem li-mi-njo, the sword which thou dost not give to him, &c.

Ol-alem li-miki-njo, the sword which thou dost not give to me.

Ol-alem le-má-isho, the sword which he does not give to me.

Ol-alem li-miki-njo, the sword which he does not give to thee.

Ol-alem le-me-isho, the sword which he does not give to him, &c.

When the antecedent is not expressed, the article precedes the particles le and ne :

Ol-le-me-ata, he who has not.	En-ne-me-ata, she who has not.
E-wēji ne-me-tii 'l-tuñganak, }	a place where there are no
En-ne-me-tii 'l-tuñganak, }	people (a desert place).

CHANGES OF LETTERS.

Various changes take place in many verbs which commence with i.

I. The i is omitted whenever it is preceded by another i and followed by i, l, n, ñg, ny, r, s, u, w, or y. It is also omitted after e in the plural of the imperative affirmative. In other words, the i of the root drops out in the second person singular, and first and second persons plural of all tenses (except in the first person plural of the subjunctive), both affirmative and negative of the active voice, and in the second person singular of all tenses of the passive voice.

Examples:

A-ii, I sharpen (it).	Ki-'i, we sharpen (it).
I-'i, thou sharpenest (it).	I-'i-i, you sharpen (it).
E-ii, he or she sharpens (it).	E-ii, they sharpen (it).
I-'i-o, sharpen (it).	E-'i-o, sharpen ye (it).
A-ilili, I hang (it) up.	I-'lili-li, you hang (it) up.
A-ininiñg, I listen.	I-'niniñg-iñgi, you listen.
A-iñgol, I stir (it).	I-'ñgol-iñgola, you stir (it).
A-inyorinyor, I taste (it).	I-'nyorinyor-oro, you taste (it).
A-iriran, I annoy (him).	I-'riran-ana, you annoy (him).
A-isalaash, I spread (it) out.	I-'salaash-asha, you spread (it) out.
A-iauañg, I get out of the way.	I-'uañg-uañga, you get out of the way.
A-iwō-u, I catch (blood in a gourd).	I-'wō-u-u, you catch (blood in a gourd).
A-iyop, I cover (him).	I-'yop-ōyopo, you cover (him).

If, however, there are two verbs, the one commencing with i and the other with another letter, the roots of which are identical except for the first letter, the i is not omitted in the present tense or the tenses formed from it. Thus: a-nyal, to chew¹; a-inyal, to tease; a-ruk, to thread; a-iruk, to reply to; a-suj, to follow; a-isuj, to wash. Examples:

A-nyal, I tease (him).	Ki-inyál, we tease (him).
I-nyal, thou teasest (him).	I-nyal-inyala, you tease (him).
E-nyal, he or she teases (him).	E-nyal, they tease (him).
A-nyal-a, I teased (him).	Ki-'nyal-á, we teased (him).
I-'nyal-a, thou teasedst (him).	I-'nyal-a, you teased (him).
E-nyal-a, he or she teased (him).	E-nyal-a, they teased (him).

II. The i is changed to n whenever it is preceded by another i and followed by d, g, k, t, and sh. The same change also takes place in the plural of the imperative affirmative.

As the letters k, t, and sh cannot follow n, they are at the same time altered to g, d, and j respectively. Examples:

A-idim, I am able.	Ki-ndím, we are able.
I-ndim, thou art able.	I-ndim-idimi, you are able.
E-idim, he or she is able.	E-idim, they are able.
I-ndim-a, be able.	E-ndim-a, be ye able.

¹ A-nyal, to chew, is sometimes also pronounced a-nyaal.

A-iguran, I play.	I-nguran-ana, you play.
A-ikilikwan, I ask (him).	I-ngilikwan-ana, you ask (him).
A-ityam, I jump.	I-ndyam-ityama, you jump.
A-isho, I give (him).	I-njō-sho, you give (him).

III. The i is changed to m whenever it is preceded by another i and followed by b, or p, v, or w. As p, v, and w cannot follow m they are at the same time altered to b. The plural of the imperative affirmative changes in a like manner. Examples :

A-ibuñg, I seize (him).	Ki-mbúñg, we seize (him).
I-mbuñg ¹ , thou seizest (him).	I-mbuñg-ubuñgu, you seize (him).
E-ibuñg, he or she seizes (him).	E-ibuñg, they seize (him).
I-mbuñg-a, seize (him).	E-mbuñg-a, seize ye (him).
A-ipuñg, or a-iyuñg, or a-iwuñg. I go out.	Ki-mbúñg, we go out.
I-mbuñg, thou goest out.	I-mbuñg-upuñgu, or i-mbuñg- uyuñgu, or i-mbuñg-uwuñgu, you go out.
E-ipuñg, or e-iyuñg, or e-iwuñg, he or she goes out.	E-ipuñg, or e-iyuñg, or e-iwuñg, they go out.
I-mbuñg-o, go out.	E-mbuñg-o, go ye out.

There are a few exceptions to these rules. In the verbs a-inos, to eat, and a-inok, to light, for instance, the i is retained in the present tenses. Examples :

A-inos, I eat (it).	I-inos-inosa, you eat (it).
A-inos-a, I ate (it).	I-'nos-a, you ate (it).

In the verbs a-itu, to return hither, and a-ito, to return thither, the i is not changed to n :

A-itu, I return hither.	I-itu-tu, you return hither.
-------------------------	------------------------------

If the last vowel of the root is o, that letter is generally changed to u when joined by a consonant to a. Examples :

A-iko, to do.	A-iku-na, I did.
A-iñgor, to look.	A-iñgur-a, I looked.
A-iñgur-aa, to look thither.	A-iñgur-aiye, I looked thither.
(But A-iñgor-u, to look hither.	A-iñgor-ua, I looked hither.)

Exceptions :

A-bor, to tear.	A-ta-bor-a, I tore (it).
A-ibor-u, to be white.	A-ibor-a, I was white.

¹ One also occasionally hears i-imbuñg, ki-imbuñg, &c.

If the verbal root terminates in e, that letter changes to i when followed by a. Example:

A-ure, to fear. A-t-uri-a, I feared (him).

If the last letter of the root is k, preceded by a, the k is omitted in the formation of the past tense. Examples:

A-bak, to mend (surgically).	A-ta-ba-a, I have mended.
A-diak, to make a mistake.	A-ta-dia, I made a mistake.
A-ipak, to enjoy.	A-ipa-a, I enjoyed (it).
A-ishiak, to find.	A-ishia, I found (it).

If the last letter of the root is k preceded by o, the k is omitted in the formation of the past tense when followed by o. Examples:

A-mok, to become accustomed to.	A-ta-mo-o, I became accustomed to.
A-yook, to go early in the morning.	A-ta-yoo, I went early in the morning.
A-ibok, to hinder.	A-ibo-o, I hindered (it).

If the last letter of the root is k preceded by o, the o is changed to u and the k is omitted when followed by a. Examples:

A-lok, to bend, fold.	A-ta-lu-a, I bended, folded (it).
A-nyok, to give oneself trouble, make an effort.	A-to-nyu-a, I made an effort.
A-irok, to cough.	A-iru-a, I coughed.
A-inok, to kindle, light.	A-inu-a, I kindled (it).

In one instance the same changes occur with a verb terminating in l:

A-dol, to see.	A-ta-du-a, I saw (him).
A-ita-dol, to make to see, to show.	A-ita-du-a, I showed (him).

If the last letter of the root is k preceded by e, the e is changed to i and the k is omitted when followed by a. Examples:

A-dek, to insult.	A-te-di-a, I insulted (him).
A-rek, to throw down.	A-te-ri-a, I have thrown (him) down.

In a few neuter verbs when the last letter of the root is k, that letter is changed to n in the formation of the past tense:

A-melok, to be sweet.	A-ta-melōn-o, I was sweet.
A-munyak, to have luck.	A-ta-munyan-a, I had luck.
A-piak, to be greedy.	A-ta-pian-a, I was greedy.

FORMATION OF TENSES.

SIMPLE VERBS.

ACTIVE VOICE.

INDICATIVE TENSES.

Present.

In simple verbs there are two present tenses, one indefinite (I follow), and one imperfect and progressive (I am following). With the exception of the second person plural, the indefinite present is formed by merely adding the personal prefixes to the root. In the second person plural¹ the root is doubled, if of only one syllable, the reduplication being usually preceded and followed by a vowel. If of more than one syllable, the last syllable only is doubled. The imperfect and progressive present is formed by affixing ita or ito, and the last syllable is doubled in the second person plural:

A-suj (nanu ninye), I follow (him). Ki-súj (iyook ninye), we follow (him).

I-suj (iye ninye), thou followest (him). I-suj-usuju ('ndae ninye), you follow (him).

E-suj (ninye ninye), he or she follows (him). E-suj (ninje ninye), they follow (him).

A-polos, I tear (him). I-polos-oso, you tear (him).

A-suj-ita, I am following (him). Ki-suj-itá, we are following (him).

I-suj-ita, thou art following (him). I-suj-ita-ta, you are following (him).

E-suj-ita, he or she is following (him). E-suj-ita, they are following (him).

A-isuj, I wash (him). Ki-isúj, we wash (him).

I-isuj, thou washest (him). I-isuj-usuju, you wash (him).

E-isuj, he or she washes (him). E-isuj, they wash (him).

A-idetidet, I dream (it). I-ndetidet-eti, you dream (it).

A-isuj-ita, I am washing (him). Ki-isuj-itá, we are washing (him).

I-isuj-ita, thou art washing (him). I-isuj-ita-ta, you are washing (him).

E-isuj-ita, he or she is washing (him). E-isuj-ita, they are washing (him).

¹ The third person singular followed by the objective personal pronoun is occasionally used in place of the second person plural. Example: e-mut indae ol-amēyu, it finishes to you the hunger or you are dying of hunger.

Still or yet is indicated by eton, which means literally he sits or stays, prefixed to the present tenses :

- Eton a-suj, I still follow (him).
 Eton a-suj-ita, I am still following (him).
 Eton a-isuj, I still wash (him).
 Eton a-isuj-ita, I am still washing (him).

Past.

The past tense of simple verbs not commencing with i or e is formed by inserting between the root and the personal prefixes a t and a vowel (generally the same as the root vowel) and affixing a or o. Verbs commencing with i or e form the past tense by simply affixing a or o. No change takes place in the formation of the plural. Examples :

- | | |
|------------------------------|----------------------------|
| A-ta-ñgas-a, I began (it). | A-iyam-a, I married (her). |
| A-te-yer-a, I boiled (it). | A-iken-a, I counted (it). |
| A-ti-gil-a, I broke (it). | A-ilíli-o, I hung (it) up. |
| A-tū-niñg-o, I heard (it). | A-inos-a, I ate (it). |
| A-tu-suj-a, I followed (it). | A-isuj-a, I washed (it). |

When a verbal root commences with a vowel (other than i or e), the prefix is often simply t :

- A-t-än-a, I bound (it).

When the root ends in two vowels, the affix is generally omitted :

- A-ta-rua, I kicked (it).

When the root ends in a single vowel, the affix a or o is sometimes preceded by an n or r :

- | | |
|----------------------|-----------------------------|
| A-ba, to get, reach. | A-ta-ba-na, I got, reached. |
| A-iro, to say. | A-iro-ro, I said. |

- A-tu-suj-a, I followed or have followed (him).
 I-tu-suj-a, thou followedst or hast followed (him).
 E-tu-suj-a, he or she followed or has followed (him).
 Ki-tu-suj-á, we followed or have followed (him).
 I-tu-suj-a, you followed or have followed (him).
 E-tu-suj-a, they followed or have followed (him).

- A-isuj-a, I washed or have washed (him).
 I-'suj-a, thou washedst or hast washed (him).
 E-isuj-a, he or she washed or has washed (him).
 Ki-'suj-á, we washed or have washed (him).
 I-'suj-a, you washed or have washed (him).
 E-isuj-a, they washed or have washed (him).

Future.

A future tense is only occasionally found in simple verbs, the present indefinite with or without the word adde, afterwards, or akenya, presently, being generally used instead.

If a future exists, it is formed by affixing u to the root, and in the second person plural by doubling the last syllable. Examples:

A-nyor-u, I shall love (him). I-nyor-u-ru, you will love (him).
A-idim-u, I shall be able. I-ndim-u-mu, you will be able.

When a verb has a regular future, all the tenses which in other verbs are formed from the present can be, and usually are, formed from the future.

Another form of the future is made by the present tense of the verb to go or to come and the infinitive.

A-lo a-suj, I go to follow (him) }
A-lōtu a-suj, I come to follow (him) } or I shall follow (him).

THE NARRATIVE TENSE.

In telling a story it is usual to begin with one verb in the past tense (or, in the event of a verb having no past, with the indefinite present and the word opa, formerly), and to put all the verbs that follow in a tense made by the letter n (na before ma; ni before k, mi, or in; and ne before me) prefixed to the indefinite present or present imperfect. If the verb has a future, the n is prefixed to this tense instead of to the indefinite present. The past tense is only rarely used in this manner.

After the verb to wish all verbs are put in the narrative tense. Example:

A-ata opa en-giteñg, n-a-iyō-u n-a-yeñg, n-e-iyōlō-u, n-e-ipiri
(I have formerly an ox, and I shall wish and I slaughter it, and it will know and it runs away), I had formerly an ox.
I wished to slaughter it. It knew and it ran away.

Both a-iyō-u, to wish, and a-iyōlō-u to know, have a future form which is here used.

The narrative tense is often employed for the imperative when the latter is the second verb in the sentence:

Ten e-lōtu, n-i-suj (if he comes, and you follow him), if he comes, follow him.

CONDITIONAL TENSES.

Present.

There are two present conditional tenses in simple verbs which are formed by prefixing tini, tin, or ten to the two present indicative tenses.

Tini is used before k, mi, or in; tin before i except when followed by n; and ten before other letters:

Ten a-suj, if or when I follow (him).	Tini ki-súj, if or when we follow (him).
Ten a-suj-ita, if or when I am following (him).	Tini ki-suj-itá, if or when we are following (him).
Ten a-isuj, if or when I wash (him).	Tini ki-isúj, if or when we wash (him).
Ten a-isuj-ita, if or when I am washing (him).	Tini ki-isuj-itá, if or when we are washing (him).

If the conditional tense is the second verb in the sentence, the prefix is sometimes omitted. This is more particularly the case when it is desired to lay stress on the condition:

A-dol a-suj, I (shall) see him if I follow him.

The meaning here might be taken to be, I wish to see him but I have no desire to follow him.

Past.

The past conditional tenses are formed by prefixing *ore pe*¹ (ore pa before words beginning with a) and ore to the present indefinite tense. The former signifies that the action is finished; the latter that it is incomplete:

Ore pa a-suj, when I followed (him).	Ore pe ki-súj, when we followed (him).
Ore a-suj, when I was following (him).	Ore ki-súj, when we were following (him).
Ore p' a-isuj, when I washed (him).	Ore pe ki-isúj, when we washed (him).
Ore a-isuj, when I was washing (him).	Ore ki-isúj, when we were washing (him).

A past conditional tense can also be formed by prefixing ten, &c., to the past tense:

Ten a-tu-suj-a, ana'-'ata aa-ta-ar-aki, if I had followed him, I should have been beaten.

Ore pe or ore pa can be prefixed to the past tense in sentences like the following:

Ore p' aa-tu-suj-a a-jo mi-ki-ar-i, now I followed thee so that thou shouldst not be beaten.

Another form of the conditional tense, which is used in conjunction with the narrative tense, is made by the verb to say followed by the imperative :

¹ Ore means now, and pe and. When pa and pe are followed by a word beginning with two vowels the a and e are dropped.

N-a-jo tu-suj-a, and I say follow (him) or and when I follow (him).	Ni-ki-jó en-du-suj, and we say follow ye (him) or and when we follow (him).
N-i-jo tu-suj-a, and thou sayest follow (him) or and when thou followest (him).	N-i-jó-jo en-du-suj, and you say follow ye (him) or and when you follow (him).
N-ē-jo tu-suj-a, and he or she says follow (him) or and when he or she follows (him).	N-ē-jo en-du-suj, and they say follow ye (him) or and when they follow (him).

The passive form is often employed in the third person plural if the subject consists of more than two or three persons or things :

N-ē-ji en-du-suj, and it is said follow ye (him) or and when they follow (him).

THE CONTINGENT TENSES.

The present and past contingent tenses are formed by prefixing anaa, if, and a-ata, to have, to the indefinite present or past tenses :

Ana'-'ata a-suj, I should or if I did follow (him).	Ana'-'ata ki-súj, we should or if we did follow (him).
Ana'-'ata a-tu-suj-a, I should have or had I followed (him).	Ana'-'ata ki-tu-suj-á, we should have or had we followed (him).
Ana'-'ata a-isuj, I should or if I did wash (him).	Ana'-'ata ki-isúj, we should or if we did wash (him).
Ana'-'ata a-isuj-a, I should have or had I washed (him).	Ana'-'ata ki-'suj-á, we should have or had we washed (him).

IMPERATIVE.

Simple verbs not commencing with i or e form the singular of the imperative like the past tense by prefixing t and a vowel to the root and affixing a or o. The plural is formed by prefixing en to the singular and dropping the affix :

Tu-suj-a, follow thou (him). En-du-suj, follow ye (him).

The imperative of verbs commencing with i or e is formed like the past tense by affixing a or o to the root. In the singular i is prefixed; in the plural e. The affix is not dropped in the plural :

I-'suj-a, wash (him). E-'suj-a, wash ye (him).

When the object of the imperative is the first person singular, ki is affixed :

Tu-suj-a-ki, follow me. En-du-suj-a-ki, follow ye me.
I-'suj-a-ki, wash me. E-'suj-a-ki, wash ye me.

The first and third persons of the subjunctive may be used as an imperative or jussive :

M-a-tu-suj-a, let me follow (him). M-e-tu-suj-a, let him follow (him).
M-a-isuj-a, let me wash (him). M-e-isuj-a, let him wash (him).

Another form of the imperative is made by the imperative of the verb to give, followed by the subjunctive. Example :

I-njo-o m-e-tu-suj-a, give him that he follows (him) or let him follow (him).

SUBJUNCTIVE.

The subjunctive is formed much like the imperative. In the first and third persons singular ma and me are prefixed to the singular of the imperative, the imperative itself is used for the second person singular and plural, and the first person plural is formed by changing the en or e of the imperative into *maa*¹ or má. The third person plural is similar to the third person singular :

M-a-tu-suj-a, that I may follow (him).	M-aa-tu-súj, that we may follow (him).
Tu-suj-a, that thou mayest follow (him).	En-du-suj, that you may follow (him).
M-e-tu-suj-a, that he or she may follow (him).	M-e-tu-suj-a, that they may follow (him).
M-a-isuj-a, that I may wash (him).	M-á-isuj-á, that we may wash (him).
I-'suj-a, that thou mayest wash (him).	E-'suj-a, that you may wash (him).
M-e-isuj-a, that he or she may wash (him).	M-e-isuj-a, that they may wash (him).

Some instances of the use of the subjunctive are given in the following examples :

Tu-'ñg-ai m-e-irag-a, leave him alone so that he may sleep.
Ti-aki m-aa-tu-suj-a (tell him that he may follow me), tell him to follow me.
E-ti-aka 'ndae en-du-suj (he told you that you may follow him), he told you to follow him.
E-isho m-e-shōm-o (he gives him that he may go), he gives him permission to go.
E-ton ol-ayōni ti-aulo m-e-ta-am-a en-gijape (the boy sits outside that the cold may eat him), the boy sits outside to get cold.
E-ta-ar-a ol-murani ol-ayōni, m-e-tua (the warrior struck the boy that he may die), the warrior struck the boy and killed him.

¹ One form of the present tense of the verb to be is a in the singular, aa in the plural (vide p. 89).

- E-lo akiti oo m-e-ta-ba-i (he goes slowly and that he may reach it), he goes slowly till he reaches it.
 M-e-ta-any-u m-e-tu-bul-u oo m-e-ta-a bōtor (let him wait for it he may grow and he may become big), let him wait for it until he grows and becomes big.
 E-pal te'n-netii m-e-ta-ba-na n-e-mut-a (he leaves it at where it is that it may get and it becomes finished), he will leave it where it is until it is finished.
 Mi-ki-ta-ar-a eng-Ai, may God strike you.

PARTICIPLES.

There are no participles in Masai. The English present participle in -ing may sometimes be represented by a present tense: e.g. e-ta-ar-a e-suj or e-ta-ar-a e-suj-ita, he struck (him) following (him). When the past participle in English is used as a verbal adjective, it is rendered in Masai by the verbal forms combined with the relative: e.g. e-iputukuny en-gima en-gerai na-ta-pej-ō-ki, a burnt child dreads the fire.

INFINITIVES.

There are two infinitives in Masai, one of which is formed by prefixing a to the root¹ in the singular, and aa (or á before verbs commencing with i) in the plural; and the other by prefixing the same letters to the past tense².

Singular.	Plural.
A-suj, } to follow.	Aa-suj, } to follow.
A-tu-suj-a, }	Aa-tu-suj, }
A-isuj, } to wash.	Á-isuj, } to wash.
A-isuj-a, }	Á-isuj-a, }

The infinitive formed like the past tense is only used after certain verbs, which are given on page 96.

Except for the reduplication or accentuation of the prefix in the plural, the infinitives are invariable, and any changes which may be caused owing to the first and second persons singular being the object, affect the personal prefixes of the governing verb only. Thus:

Ki-ñgas a-suj, thou me beginnest to follow or thou beginnest to follow me.

¹ Whenever a verb has a special form for the future, the letters a, &c., are generally prefixed to this tense instead of to the root: e.g. a-nyor-u, to love. It is, however, permissible to say a-nyor.

² Verbs commencing with any letter except i or e drop the affix of the past tense in the plural, as is done in the imperative and subjunctive.

Aa-ñgas aa-suj, they me begin to follow or they begin to follow me.

Ki-'yōlo a-tu-suj-a, thou me knowest to follow or thou knowest how to follow me.

Á-iyōlo aa-tu-suj, they me know to follow or they know how to follow me.

The use of the infinitives is shown in the following examples :

E-ton ol-tuñgani a-boit-are e-ñgorōyōni, the man is sitting (to be) together with the woman.

E-itō-ki a-ar (he him does again to beat), he will beat him again.

E-pwo aa-ñgas á-iñgor-u ol-tuñgani (they go to begin to look hither a man), they first of all search for a man.

E-ētuo 'l-ñgojīnia aa-dum-aa ol-meneñgani áinos, the hyenas came to take away the corpse to eat it.

I-ndim a-ta-ar-a ? Canst thou kill him ?

I-ndim-idimi aa-ta-ar ? Can you kill him ?

E-noto a-itobir-a en-gias, he has succeeded in doing the work.

E-noto á-itobir-a en-gias, they have succeeded in doing the work.

THE NEGATIVE CONJUGATION—ACTIVE VOICE.

Present.

The negative present of all verbs is formed by prefixing m (mi) before in and k) to the affirmative present :

M-a-suj, I follow (him) not.	Mi-ki-súj, we follow (him) not.
M-a-suj-ita, I am not following (him).	Mi-ki-suj-itá, we are not following (him).
M-a-isuj, I wash (him) not.	Mi-ki-isúj, we wash (him) not.
M-a-isuj-ita, I am not washing (him).	Mi-ki-isuj-itá, we are not washing (him).

Past.

There is one negative form referring to past time generally. It is made by prefixing to the affirmative indefinite present the word eitu, which is the third person singular of the present tense of the verb a-itu, to return hither, but which has come to mean not or not yet :

Eitu a-suj, I did not follow (him) or have not followed (him).
Eitu ki-súj, we did not follow (him) or have not followed (him).
Eitu a-isuj, I did not wash (him) or have not washed (him).
Eitu ki-isúj, we did not wash (him) or have not washed (him).

Not yet is expressed by prefixing eton (he sits or still) to the negative past :

Eton eitu a-suj, I have not yet followed (him).
Eton eitu a-isuj, I have not yet washed (him).

Future.

The negative form of verbs which have a future is made by prefixing m (mi before k) to the affirmative future :

M-a-nyor-u, I shall not love (him).	Mi-ki-nyor-ú, we shall not love (him).
M-a-idim-u, I shall not be able.	Mi-ki-ndim-ú, we shall not be able.

THE NARRATIVE TENSE.

The negative narrative tense is formed by inserting m (mi before k) between the prefixes na, ni, and ne, and the personal prefixes :

Na-m-a-suj, and I follow (him) not.	Ni-mi-ki-súj, and we follow (him) not.
Ni-m-i-suj, and thou followest (him) not.	Ni-m-i-suj-usuju, and you follow (him) not.
Ne-m-e-suj, and he or she follows (him) not.	Ne-m-e-suj, and they follow (him) not.
Na-m-a-isuj, and I wash (him) not.	Ni-mi-ki-isúj, and we wash (him) not.

CONDITIONAL TENSES.

Present.

To form the present conditional tenses the prefixes teni or tini are placed before the present negative tenses. Tini is used before mi, teni before all other letters :

Teni m-a-suj, if or when I do not follow (him).	Tini mi-ki-súj, if or when we do not follow (him).
Teni m-a-suj-ita, if or when I am not following (him).	Tini mi-ki-suj-itá, if or when we are not following (him).
Teni m-a-isuj, if or when I do not wash (him).	Tini mi-ki-isúj, if or when we do not wash (him).
Teni m-a-isuj-ita, if or when I am not washing (him).	Tini mi-ki-isuj-itá, if or when we are not washing (him).

Past.

The negative past conditional tenses are formed by prefixing ten to the negative of the past indicative, or by prefixing ore pe or ore to the negative of the present indefinite :

Ten eitu a-suj, if I did not follow (him).	Ten eitu a-isuj, if I did not wash (him).
Ore pe m-a-suj, when I did not follow (him).	Ore pe m-a-isuj, when I did not wash (him).
Ore m-a-suj, when I was not following (him).	Ore m-a-isuj, when I was not washing (him).

THE CONTINGENT TENSES.

The negative present and past contingent tenses are formed by prefixing anaa and a-ata to the negative present and past indicative :

Ana'-'ata m-a-suj, I should not follow (him).	Ana'-'ata m-a-isuj, I should not wash (him).
Ana'-'ata eitu a-suj, I should not have followed (him).	Ana'-'ata eitu a-isuj, I should not have washed (him).

IMPERATIVE.

The negative imperative is formed by prefixing to the root mi in the singular, and e-mi in the plural :

Mi-suj, follow (him) not.	E-mi-suj, follow ye (him) not.
Mi-isuj, wash (him) not.	E-mi-isuj, wash ye (him) not.

When the object of the imperative is the first person singular, ki is inserted between the prefix and the root :

Mi-ki-suj, follow me not.	E-mi-ki-suj, follow ye me not.
Mi-ki-isuj, wash me not.	E-mi-ki-isuj, wash ye me not.

Another method of forming the negative imperative, and one which is very frequently used, is by the negative imperative of the verb to give followed by the present indicative.

Mi-ki-njo a-suj, do not give me that I follow (him) or do not let me follow (him).

Mi-njo e-suj, do not give him that he follows (him) or do not let him follow (him).

NEGATIVE SUBJUNCTIVE.

The first and third persons singular and plural of the negative subjunctive are the same as the negative indefinite present ; the second persons are the same as the negative imperative :

M-a-suj, that I may not follow (him).	Mi-ki-súj, that we may not follow (him).
Mi-suj, that thou mayest not follow (him).	E-mi-suj, that you may not follow (him).
M-e-suj, that he or she may not follow (him).	M-e-suj, that they may not follow (him).
M-a-isuj, that I may not wash (him).	Mi-ki-isúj, that we may not wash (him).
Mi-isuj, that thou mayest not wash (him).	E-mi-isuj, that you may not wash (him).
M-e-isuj, that he may not wash (him).	M-e-isuj, that they may not wash (him).

THE IMPERSONAL FORM OR PASSIVE VOICE.

There is an impersonal form which corresponds to the passive voice in English. This form is only used in the third person singular, and the indirect object (the subject in English) is generally added.

Present.

The present tense is formed from the active by affixing i :

Aa-suj-i nanu, it is followed to me or I am followed.	E-suj-i 'yook, it is followed to us or we are followed.
Ki-suj-i 'ye, it is followed to thee or thou art followed.	E-suj-i 'ndae, it is followed to you or you are followed.
E-suj-i ninye, it is followed to him or he is followed.	E-suj-i ninje, it is followed to them or they are followed.
Aa-suj-ita-i nanu, it is being followed to me or I am being followed.	E-suj-ita-i 'yook, it is being followed to us or we are being followed.
Á-isuj-i nanu, it is washed to me or I am washed.	E-isuj-i 'yook, it is washed to us or we are washed.
Á-isuj-ita-i nanu, it is being washed to me or I am being washed.	E-isuj-ita-i 'yook, it is being washed to us or we are being washed.

Past.

The past tense is made by affixing ki to the active :

Aa-tu-suj-a-ki nanu, it has been followed to me or I have been followed.	E-tu-suj-a-ki 'yook, it has been followed to us or we have been followed.
Ki-tu-suj-a-ki 'ye, it has been followed to thee or thou hast been followed.	E-tu-suj-a-ki 'ndae, it has been followed to you or you have been followed.
E-tu-suj-a-ki ninye, it has been followed to him or he has been followed.	E-tu-suj-a-ki ninje, it has been followed to them or they have been followed.
Á-isuj-a-ki nanu, it has been washed to me or I have been washed.	E-isuj-a-ki 'yook, it has been washed to us or we have been washed.

Future.

Those verbs which have a future form the passive by affixing ni to the active:

Aa-nyor-u-ni nanu, it will be loved to me or I shall be loved.	E-nyor-u-ni 'yook, it will be loved to us or we shall be loved.
---	--

A common way of forming the future of other verbs is by the present passive of the verbs to go or to come followed by the infinitive :

Aa-pwei aa-suj nanu, it is gone to me to be followed or I am gone to be followed or I shall be followed.	E-pwei aa-suj iyook, it is gone to us to be followed or we are gone to be followed or we shall be followed.
Aa-pwōnu-ni aa-suj nanu, it is come to me to be followed or I am come to be followed or I shall be followed.	E-pwōnu-ni aa-suj iyook, it is come to us to be followed or we are come to be followed or we shall be followed.

The narrative, conditional, and contingent tenses are formed by affixing the same words or letters as in the active voice :

THE NARRATIVE TENSE.

N-aa-suj-i nanu, and it is followed to me or and I am followed.	N-e-suj-i 'yook, and it is followed to us or and we are followed.
--	--

CONDITIONAL TENSES.

Ten aa-suj-i nanu, if it is followed to me or if I am followed.	Ten e-suj-i 'yook, if it is followed to us or if we are followed.
Ten aa-suj-ita-i nanu, if it is being followed to me or if I am being followed.	Ten e-suj-ita-i 'yook, if it is being followed to us or if we are being followed.
Ore p' aa-suj-i nanu, when it was followed to me or when I was followed.	Ore pe e-suj-i 'yook, when it was followed to us or when we were followed.
Ore aa-suj-i nanu, when it was being followed to me or when I was being followed.	Ore e-suj-i 'yook, when it was being followed to us or when we were being followed.

THE CONTINGENT TENSES.

Ana'-ata aa-suj-i nanu, it would be followed to me or I should be followed.	Ana'-ata e-suj-i 'yook, it would be followed to us or we should be followed.
Ana'-ata aa-tu-suj-a-ki nanu, it would have been followed to me or I should have been followed.	Ana'-ata e-tu-suj-a-ki 'yook, it would have been followed to us or we should have been followed.
Ana'-ata á-isuj-a-ki nanu, it would have been washed to me or I should have been washed.	Ana'-ata e-isuj-a-ki 'yook, it would have been washed to us or we should have been washed.

IMPERATIVE.

There is no form for the passive imperative, and either the second persons of the passive subjunctive, or the imperative affirmative of the verb to give followed by the present indicative passive, is used instead :

Mi-ki-tu-suj-i 'ye, that it may be followed to thee or be followed.
 Mi-ki-isuj-i 'ye, that it may be washed to thee or be washed.
 I-njo-o ki-suj-i 'ye, give that it is followed to thee or be followed.
 I-njo-o ki-isuj-i 'ye, give that it is washed to thee or be washed.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

The passive subjunctive is formed like the active subjunctive, the affix and the personal prefixes alone being changed :

M-aa-tu-suj-i nanu, that it may be followed to me or that I may be followed.	M-e-tu-suj-i 'yook, that it may be followed to us or that we may be followed.
Mi-ki-tu-suj-i 'ye, that it may be followed to thee or that thou mayest be followed.	M-e-tu-suj-i 'ndae, that it may be followed to you or that you may be followed.
M-e-tu-suj-i ninye, that it may be followed to him or that he may be followed.	M-e-tu-suj-i ninje, that it may be followed to them or that they may be followed.
M-á-isuj-i nanu, that it may be washed to me or that I may be washed.	M-e-isuj-i 'yook, that it may be washed to us or that we may be washed.

INFINITIVES.

The infinitives of the passive voice are similar to the plural of the infinitives of the active voice and are invariable :

Singular.		Plural.
Aa-suj, } to be followed.		Á-isuj, } to be washed.
Aa-tu-suj, }		Á-isuj-a, }

Examples :

Ki-ñgas-i aa-suj iye, it is begun to thee to be followed or thou beginnest to be followed.	E-ñgas-i aa-suj iyook, it is begun to us to be followed or we begin to be followed.
Ki-'yōlo-i aa-tu-suj iye, it is known to thee to be followed or thou knowest how to be followed.	E-iyōlo-i aa-tu-suj iyook, it is known to us to be followed or we know how to be followed.

THE NEGATIVE PASSIVE.

The negative passive is formed in the same way as the negative active :

Present.

M-aa-suj-i nanu, it is not followed to me or I am not followed.	M-e-suj-i 'yook, it is not followed to us or we are not followed.
M-aa-suj-ita-i nanu, it is not being followed to me or I am not being followed.	M-e-suj-ita-i 'yook, it is not being followed to us or we are not being followed.
M-á-isuj-i nanu, it is not washed to me or I am not washed.	M-e-isuj-i 'yook, it is not washed to us or we are not washed.
M-á-isuj-ita-i nanu, it is not being washed to me or I am not being washed.	M-e-isuj-ita-i 'yook, it is not being washed to us or we are not being washed.

Past.

Eitu aa-suj-i nanu, it has not been followed to me or I have not been followed.	Eitu e-suj-i 'yook, it has not been followed to us or we have not been followed.
Eitu á-isuj-i nanu, it has not been washed to me or I have not been washed.	Eitu e-isuj-i 'yook, it has not been washed to us or we have not been washed.

Future.

M-aa-nyor-u-ni nanu, it will not be loved to me or I shall not be loved.	M-e-nyor-u-ni 'yook, it will not be loved to us or we shall not be loved.
---	--

THE NARRATIVE TENSE.

Na-m-aa-suj-i nanu, and it is not followed to me or and I am not followed.	Ne-me-suj-i 'yook, and it is not followed to us or and we are not followed.
Na-m-á-isuj-i nanu, and it is not washed to me or and I am not washed.	Ne-m-e-isuj-i 'yook, and it is not washed to us or and we are not washed.

CONDITIONAL TENSES.

Teni m-aa-suj-i nanu, if it is not followed to me or if I am not followed.	Teni m-e-suj-i 'yook, if it is not followed to us or if we are not followed.

DERIVATIVE VERBS.

VERBS DENOTING MOTION TOWARDS THE SPEAKER.

Verbs denoting motion towards the speaker take the affix u.

ACTIVE VOICE.

Present.

Derivatives have only one present tense. In the second person plural the last syllable is doubled¹:

- | | |
|---|---|
| A-suj-u, I follow or am following him hither or I come towards. | I-suj-u-ju, you follow or are following him hither or you come towards. |
| A-dō-u, I descend hither. | I-dō-u-u, you descend hither. |

A few verbs which have no simple form are conjugated in the same way²:

- | | |
|-------------------------|------------------------------|
| A-inep-u, I meet (him). | I-'nep-u-pu, you meet (him). |
|-------------------------|------------------------------|

¹ An exception to this rule is given on p. 74.

² A few intransitive verbs are also conjugated in this way. (For the usual method of forming intransitive verbs vide p. 81.) Examples: a-ikilikwan-u, to ask (intr.), from a-ikilikwan, to ask (tr.); a-idetidet-u, to dream (intr.), from a-idetidet, to dream (tr.).

Past.

The singular of the past tense is formed as in simple verbs. In the plural the affixes are tua or tuó :

A-tu-suj-u-a, I followed (him) hither.	Ki-tu-suj-u-tuá, we followed (him) hither.
A-ta-dō-u-o, I descended hither.	Ki-ta-dō-u-tuó, we descended hither.
A-inep-u-a, I met (him).	Ki-'nep-u-tuá, we met (him).

Future.

The future tense, when it exists, is made by inserting a y between the root and the affix u. The last syllable is doubled in the second person plural :

A-ita-y-u, I shall put out hither.	I-nda-y-u-yu, you will put out hither.
------------------------------------	--

NARRATIVE, CONDITIONAL, AND CONTINGENT TENSES.

The narrative, conditional, and contingent tenses of all derivatives are formed as in simple verbs. Examples :

N-a-suj-u, and I follow (him) hither.	Ni-ki-suj-ú, and we follow (him) hither.
Ten a-suj-u, if or when I follow (him) hither.	Tini ki-suj-ú, if or when we follow (him) hither.
Ana'-'ata a-suj-u, I should follow (him) hither.	Ana'-'ata ki-suj-ú, we should follow (him) hither.
Ana'-'ata a-tu-suj-u-a, I should have followed (him) hither.	Ana'-'ata ki-tu-suj-u-tuá, we should have followed (him) hither.

IMPERATIVE AND SUBJUNCTIVE.

In the imperative and subjunctive the affix a or o of simple verbs is omitted¹ :

IMPERATIVE.

Tu-suj-u, follow (him) hither.	En-du-suj-u, follow ye (him) hither.
I-'nep-u, meet (him).	E-'nep-u, meet ye (him).

When the object of the imperative is the first person singular, aki is affixed :

Tu-suj-u-aki, follow hither.	me	En-du-suj-u-aki, follow ye me hither.
------------------------------	----	---------------------------------------

¹ In a few verbs tu is affixed to form the plural of the imperative, e. g. e-nda-u-tu, put ye out hither.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-tu-suj-u, that I may follow (him) hither.	Maa-tu-suj-ú, that we may follow (him) hither.
Tu-suj-u, that thou mayest follow (him) hither.	En-du-suj-u, that you may follow (him) hither.
Me-tu-suj-u, that he or she may follow (him) hither.	Me-tu-suj-u, that they may follow (him) hither.
Ma-inep-u, that I may meet (him).	Má-inep-ú, that we may meet (him).
I-'nep-u, that thou mayest meet (him).	E-'nep-u, that you may meet (him).
Me-inep-u, that he or she may meet (him).	Me-inep-u, that they may meet (him).

INFINITIVES.

The infinitive formed like the past tense drops the affix a or o of simple verbs :

Singular.		Plural.
A-suj-u,	} to follow hither.	Aa-suj-u,
A-tu-suj-u,		Aa-tu-suj-u,
A-inep-u, to meet.		A-inep-u, to meet,

PASSIVE VOICE.

The present and future of the passive voice are formed by affixing ni to the active voice :

Present.

Aa-suj-u-ni nanu, it is followed to me hither or I am followed hither.	E-suj-u-ni 'yook, it is followed to us hither, or we are followed hither.
Á-inep-u-ni nanu, it is met to me or I am met.	E-inep-u-ni 'yook, it is met to us or we are met.

Future.

Á-ita-y-u-ni nanu, it will be put out to me hither or I shall be put out hither.	E-ita-y-u-ni 'yook, it will be put out to us hither or we shall be put out hither.
---	---

Past.

The past tense is formed as in simple verbs by affixing ki to the past tense of the active voice :

Aa-tu-suj-u-a-ki nanu, it has been followed to me hither or I have been followed hither.	E-tu-suj-u-a-ki 'yook, it has been followed to us hither, or we have been followed hither.
Á-inep-u-a-ki nanu, it has been met to me or I have been met.	E-inep-u-a-ki 'yook, it has been met to us or we have been met.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

The passive subjunctive takes the same affix as the present indicative :

M-aa-tu-suj-u-ni nanu, that it may be followed to me hither or that I may be followed hither.	M-e-tu-suj-u-ni 'yook, that it may be followed to us hither or that we may be followed hither.
--	---

INFINITIVES.

Aa-suj-u,	} to be followed hither.
Aa-tu-suj-u,

VERBS DENOTING MOTION FROM THE SPEAKER.

ACTIVE VOICE.

Present.

The present tense is formed by affixing ya or *yo*¹, aa or oo to the root. The two former are employed when the root terminates in a vowel, the latter when in a consonant. When the affix is ya or yo, the last syllable is doubled in the second person plural, otherwise no change is made :

A-suj-aa, I follow or am follow- ing (him) thither.	I-suj-aa, you follow (him) thither.
A-dō-yo, I descend thither.	I-dō-yō-yo, you descend thither.
A-ibugh-oo, I pour (it) away.	I-mbugh-oo, you pour (it) away.

Past.

The affixes of the past tense are iye, aiye, or oiye in the singular, and itye, aitye, or ōitye in the plural :

A-tu-suj-aiye, I followed (him) thither.	Ki-tu-suj-aityé, we followed (him) thither.
A-ta-do-iye, I descended thither.	Ki-ta-dō-ityé, we descended thither.
A-ibugh-oiye, I poured (it) away.	Ki-mbugh-ōityé, we poured (it) away.

IMPERATIVE AND SUBJUNCTIVE.

The affixes of the imperative and subjunctive are ai, oi, or i :

IMPERATIVE.

Tu-suj-ai, follow (him) thither.	En-du-suj-ai, follow ye (him) thither.
Ta-do-i, descend thither.	En-da-do-i, descend ye thither.
I-mbugh-oi, pour (it) away.	E-mbugh-oi, pour ye (it) away.

¹ The affixes ya or yo are sometimes pronounced iya or iyō.

When the object of the imperative is the first person singular, yōki is also affixed :

Tu-suj-ai-yōki, follow me thither. En-du-suj-ai-yōki, follow ye me thither.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-tu-suj-ai, that I may follow (him) thither.	Maa-tu-suj-ái, that we may follow (him) thither.
Tu-suj-ai, that thou mayest follow (him) thither.	En-du-suj-ai, that you may follow (him) thither.
Me-tu-suj-ai, that he or she may follow (him) thither.	Me-tu-suj-ai, that they may follow (him) thither.
Ma-ibugh-oi, that I may pour (it) away.	Má-ibugh-ói, that we may pour (it) away.
I-mbugh-oi, that thou mayest pour (it) away.	E-mbugh-oi, that you may pour (it) away.
Me-ibugh-oi, that he may pour (it) away.	Me-ibugh-oi, that they may pour (it) away.

INFINITIVES.

In the infinitive formed by prefixing a and aa (or á) to the root the affix employed is the same as in the present indicative. The affix of the infinitive formed like the past tense is ai, oi, or i, as in the imperative and subjunctive :

Singular.		Plural.
A-suj-aa,	} to follow thither.	Aa-suj-aa,
A-tu-suj-ai,		Aa-tu-suj-ai,
A-dō-yo,	} to descend thither.	Aa-dō-yo,
A-ta-do-i,		Aa-ta-do-i,
A-ibugh-oo,	} to pour away.	Á-ibugh-oo,
A-ibugh-oi,		Á-ibugh-oi,

PASSIVE VOICE.

Present.

The present tense of the passive voice is formed by adding ri to the present active. When the latter ends in aa or oo, one of the vowels is often omitted :

Aa-suj-ari nanu, it is followed to me thither or I am followed thither.	E-suj-ari 'yook, it is followed to us thither, or we are followed thither.
---	--

Past.

The past tense is formed by affixing ai-yōki, oi-yōki, or i-yōki to the root :

Aa-tu-suj-ai-yōki nanu, it has been followed to me thither or I have been followed thither.	E-tu-suj-ai-yōki 'yook, it has been followed to us thither or we have been followed thither.
---	--

SUBJUNCTIVE.

In the subjunctive the same affixes are used as in the present indicative:

M-aa-tu-suj-ari nanu, that it	M-e-tu-suj-ari 'yook, that it may may be followed to me	be followed to us thither or thither or that I may be	that we may be followed followed thither.	thither.

INFINITIVES.

Aa-suj-aa,	} to be followed thither.
Aa-tu-suj-ai,

THE DATIVE FORM.

The dative form is used where in English a preposition is required to connect the verb with its object, and intimates that the action of the verb is performed for or against a person or thing. A few verbs which take no preposition in English also belong to this class.

The simple form of verbs followed by the local case can often be substituted for the dative form. Example:

E-itiñg-ōkityo 'l-omon enne,	} the news ended (at) here.
E-itiñg-o 'l-omon te-'nne,

ACTIVE VOICE.

Present.

The present tense is formed by adding aki, iki, or ōki to the root. In the second person plural the last syllable is doubled:

A-suj-aki, I follow for (him)	I-suj-aki-ki, you follow for (him).
or I follow (him) to.
A-ba-iki, I arrive at (it) or	I-ba-iki-ki, you arrive at (it).
I reach (it),
A-mit-iki, I forbid (him).	I-mit-iki-ki, you forbid (him).
A-iro-rōki ¹ , I greet (him).	I-ro-rōki-ki, you greet (him).

Past.

The past tense is formed by the affixes aka, ikia, *ikio*², or ōko in the singular; and akitya, ikitya, ikityo, or ōkityo in the plural:

A-tu-suj-aka, I followed for	Ki-tu-suj-akityá, we followed for (him).	(him).

¹ When the last letter of the root is a vowel, n or r is sometimes joined to the affix.

² Ikia and ikio are frequently pronounced ikya and ikyo.

A-ta-ba-íkia, I arrived at (it).	Ki-ta-ba-ikityá, we arrived at (it).
A-tō-mit-íkio, I forbade (him).	Ki-tō-mit-ikityó, we forbade (him).
A-iro-rōko, I greeted (him).	Ki-'ro-rōkityó, we greeted (him).

IMPERATIVE, SUBJUNCTIVE, AND INFINITIVES.

The same affixes are used in the imperative, subjunctive, and infinitives as in the present :

IMPERATIVE.

Tu-suj-aki, follow for (him).	En-du-suj-aki, follow ye for (him).
Ta-ba-iki, arrive at (it).	En-da-ba-iki, arrive ye at (it).
Tō-mit-iki, forbid (him).	En-dō-mit-iki, forbid ye (him).
I-'ro-rōki, greet (him).	E-'ro-rōki, greet ye (him).

When the first person singular is the object of the imperative the affixes change to akaki, ikiaki, iōkōki, or ōkōki :

Tu-suj-akaki, follow for me.	En-du-suj-akaki, follow ye for me.
Ta-ba-ikiaki, reach me.	En-da-ba-ikiaki, reach ye me.
Tō-mit-iōkōki, forbid me.	En-dō-mit-iōkōki, forbid ye me.
I-'ro-rōkōki, greet me.	E-'ro-rōkōki, greet ye me.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-tu-suj-aki, that I may follow for (him).	Maa-tu-suj-akí, that we may follow for (him).
Ma-iro-rōki, that I may greet (him).	Má-iro-rōkí, that we may greet (him).

There is a second form for the plural of the imperative and subjunctive, which is employed when there are two objects. This form is made by adding ti to the affix. Examples :

En-du-suj-aki ol-tuñgani, follow ye the man for him.
En-du-suj-aki-ti ol-tuñgani añg, follow ye the man for him to the kraal.
En-du-suj-aka-ki ol-tuñgani, follow ye the man for me.
En-du-suj-aka-ki-ti ol-tuñgani añg, follow ye the man for me to the kraal.
Ti-aki kuldo m-e-tu-suj-aki ol-tuñgani, tell them to follow the man for him.
Ti-aki kuldo m-e-tu-suj-aki-ti ol-tuñgani añg, tell them to follow the man to the kraal for him.

INFINITIVES.

Singular.	Plural.
A-suj-aki, } to follow for.	Aa-suj-aki, } to follow for.
A-tu-suj-aki, }	Aa-tu-suj-aki, }
A-iro-rōki, to greet.	Á-iro-rōki, to greet.

THE PASSIVE VOICE.

Present.

The present tense of the passive is formed by adding ni to the active :

Aa-suj-aki-ni nanu, it is followed for me or I am followed for.	E-suj-aki-ni 'yook, it is followed for us or we are followed for.
Á-iro-rōki-ni nanu, it is greeted to me or I am greeted.	E-iro-rōki-ni 'yook, it is greeted to us or we are greeted.

Past.

The past tense is formed by adding akaki, ikiaki, iōkōki, or ōkōki to the root :

Aa-tu-suj-akaki nanu, it has been followed to me or I have been followed.	E-tu-suj-akaki 'yook, it has been followed to us or we have been followed.
A-iro-rōkōki nanu, it has been greeted to me or I have been greeted.	E-iro-rōkōki 'yook, it has been greeted to us or we have been greeted.

THE APPLIED FORM.

When in English a preposition connected with a verb can stand by itself at the end of a sentence, special forms must be used in Masai. If the verb is in the active voice and transitive, ye (ie after r) is affixed, if intransitive, ishore or are. The passive voice is formed by affixing ki to the active. The relative is also employed :

I-'ya-u ol-murunya la-barn-ye ol-munyei, bring the razor for me to shave with.

I-'ya-u ol-murunya la-barn-ishore, bring the razor for me to shave with.

A-ata eng-are na-isuj-ye ol-tudutai, I have water for washing the boil in.

A-ata eng-are na-isuj-are, I have water for washing in.

I-njo-o-ki eng-alem na-duñg-ye 'n-giri, give me the knife to cut meat with.

I-njo-o-ki eng-alem na-duñg-ishore, give me the knife to cut with.

E-wēji nē-yeñg-ye 'l-tuñganak en-giteñg, the place where men slaughter the ox in.

E-wēji nē-yeñg-ishore 'l-tuñganak, the place where men slaughter in.

E-wēji nē-yeñg-ye-ki en-giteñg, the place where the ox is slaughtered in.

E-wēji nē-yeñg-ishore-ki, the place where it is (habitually) slaughtered in.

In derivative verbs n or r is inserted between the verbal roots and the affixes :

- E-wēji ne-puk-u-nye, a place to go out at.
 E-wēji ne-puk-u-nye-ki, a place to be gone out at.
 E-wēji ne-isud-ó-rie, a place to hide in.
 E-wēji ne-isud-o-rié-ki, a place to be hidden in.

THE REFLEXIVE AND THE NEUTER OR QUASI-PASSIVE FORM¹.

Most simple verbs have either a reflexive or a neuter or quasi-passive form. Certain verbs are only used as reflexives.

Present.

The present tense is formed by the affix a or o. In the second person plural the last syllable is doubled :

- A-gor-o, I am angry or I anger myself. I-gor-o-ro, you are angry.
 A-isuj-a, I bathe. I-isuj-a-ja, you bathe.

Past.

The singular of the past tense is formed by affixing e to the root, the plural by ate or ôte :

- A-ta-gor-e, I have been angry. Ki-ta-gor-ôté, we have been angry.
 A-isuj-e, I bathed. Ki-'suj-até, we bathed.

Future.

A future exists and is formed by adding yu to the present tense. In the second person plural the last syllable is doubled :

- A-gor-ō-yu, I shall be angry. I-gor-ō-yu-yu, you will be angry.
 A-isuj-a-yu, I shall bathe. I-isuj-a-yu-yu, you will bathe.

IMPERATIVE AND SUBJUNCTIVE.

The singular affixes of the imperative and subjunctive are the same as those employed in the future, viz. ayu or ōyu. These affixes are changed in the plural to ata or oto :

IMPERATIVE.

- Ta-gor-ōyu, be angry. En-da-gor-oto, be ye angry.
 I-'suj-ayu, bathe thyself. E-'suj-ata, bathe yourselves.

¹ The following examples will show what is meant by the neuter or quasi-passive: ten e-idip-ayu 'ng-oloŋgi are, nalôtu, when two days are (or become) finished, I will come; a-suj elle, kake m-e-suj-ayu elde, I (will) follow this one, but that one will not be (or become) followed.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-ta-gor-ōyu, that I may be angry. Maa-ta-gor-otó, that we may be angry.
 Ma-isuj-ayu, that I may bathe. Má-isuj-atá, that we may bathe.

INFINITIVES.

The affixes of the infinitives are the same as those used in the present or in the imperative and subjunctive.

Singular.

Plural.

A-gor-o,
 A-ta-gor-ōyu, } to be angry.

Aa-gor-o,
 Aa-ta-gor-oto, } to be angry.

A-isuj-a,
 A-isuj-ayu, } to bathe.

Á-isuj-a,
 Á-isuj-ata, } to bathe.

THE REFLEXIVE FORM OF DERIVATIVES.

Derivatives denoting motion towards the speaker form the reflexive and neuter or quasi-passive by affixing nyi to the simple verb. This affix is invariable, except in the second person plural of the present tense, when the last syllable is doubled :

A-shuk-u-nyi, to return (oneself) hither, from a-shuk-u, to return (something) hither :

A-shuk-u-nyi, I return or shall return (myself) hither.

I-shuk-u-nyi-nyi, you return (yourself) hither.

A-tu-shuk-u-nyi, I returned (myself) hither.

I-tu-shuk-u-nyi, you returned (yourself) hither.

A-sul-u-nyi, to fall (oneself) from a height hither, from a-sul-u, to throw down hither, e. g. fruit from a tree :

A-sul-u-nyi, I fall, am falling or shall fall (myself) from a height hither.

I-sul-u-nyi-nyi, you fall, are falling or will fall (yourself) from a height hither.

A-tu-sul-u-nyi, I fell (myself) from a height hither.

I-tu-sul-u-nyi, you fell (yourself) from a height hither.

Derivatives denoting motion from the speaker form the reflexive and neuter or quasi-passive by changing the affix of the simple verb (oo, aa, aiye, aītye, &c.) into ori or ari. This affix is invariable, except in the second person plural of the present tense, when the last syllable is doubled :

A-isud-ori, to hide (oneself), from a-isud-oo, to hide away :

A-isud-ori, I hide, am hiding, or shall hide (myself).

I-'sud-ori-ri, you hide or will hide (yourself).

A-isud-ori, I hid (myself).

I-'sud-ori, you hid (yourself).

A-sul-ari, to fall (oneself) from a height thither, from a-sul-aa, to throw down thither :

A-sul-ari, I fall, am falling, or shall fall (myself) from a height thither. I-sul-ari-ri, you fall or will fall (yourself) from a height thither.

A-tu-sul-ari, I fell (myself) from a height thither. I-tu-sul-ari, you fell (yourself) from a height thither.

DATIVE VERBS USED AS REFLEXIVES AND NEUTER OR QUASI-PASSIVES.

When dative verbs are used as reflexives, the affixes are variable as in simple reflexive verbs :

Present.

A-rikī-no, I forget (it). I-rikī-nō-no, you forget (it).
A-igar-akī-no, I lean upon (him). I-ngar-akī-nō-no, you lean upon (him).

Past.

A-to-rikī-ne, I forgot (it). I-to-rikī-nōte, you forgot (it).
A-igar-akī-ne, I leant upon (him). I-ngar-akī-nōte, you leant upon (him).

Future.

A-rikī-nō-yu, I shall forget (it). I-rikī-nō-yu-yu, you will forget (it).
A-igar-akī-nō-yu, I shall lean upon (him). I-ngar-akī-nō-yu-yu, you will lean upon (him).

INTRANSITIVE VERBS.

By affixing -sh, -ish, or -osh to the root, most transitive verbs can be used intransitively. Intransitive verbs take the same terminal letters in the present and past tenses as reflexive verbs. A few intransitive verbs, simple forms of which do not exist, are also conjugated in the same manner :

Present.

A-rap-osh-o, I have enough to eat. I-rap-osh-ō-sho, you have enough to eat.
A-isuj-ish-o, I wash. I-'suj-ish-ō-sho, you wash.

Past.

A-ta-rap-osh-e, I had enough to eat. I-ta-rap-osh-ōte, you had enough to eat.
A-isuj-ish-e, I washed. I-'suj-ish-ōte, you washed.

Future.

A few verbs possess a future tense which is formed by affixing yu to the present :

A-on-ish-ō-yu, I shall bite or I-ōn-ish-ō-yu-yu, you will bite or sting.

IMPERATIVE, SUBJUNCTIVE, AND INFINITIVES.

The affixes employed in the formation of the imperative, subjunctive, and infinitives are similar to those used in the present tense :

IMPERATIVE.

Ta-rap-osh-o, have enough to eat.	En-da-rap-osh-o, have ye enough to eat.
I-'suj-ish-o, wash.	E-'suj-ish-o, wash ye.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-ta-rap-osh-o, that I may have enough to eat.	I may	Maa-ta-rap-osh-ó, that we may have enough to eat.	we may
Ma-isuj-ish-o, that I may wash.	I may wash.	Má-isuj-ish-ó, that we may wash.	we may wash.

INFINITIVES.

Singular.		Plural.
A-rap-osh-o, }	to have enough	Aa-rap-osh-o, }
A-ta-rap-osh-o, }	to eat.	Aa-ta-rap-osh-o, }
A-isuj-ish-o, to wash.		Á-isuj-ish-o, to wash.

THE RECIPROCAL FORM.

The reciprocal form in Masai, which denotes doing something with some one else, is made by affixing are or ore to the root of simple verbs and nare or nore to derivatives. The affix is invariable, except in the second person plural of the present tense, when the last syllable is doubled.

When the meaning denotes doing something with each other the reflexive form is used. Examples of the reciprocal form of simple verbs :

A-suj-are, I follow together with some one.	I-suj-are-re, you follow together with some one.
A-tu-suj-are, I followed together with some one.	I-tu-suj-are, you followed together with some one.
Ki-suj-á, we follow each other.	I-suj-a-ja, you follow each other.
Ki-tu-suj-até, we followed each other.	I-tu-suj-ate, you followed each other.

A-igwen-are, I consult together with some one.	I-ngwen-are-re, you consult together with some one.
A-igwen-are, I consulted together with some one.	I-ngwen-are, you consulted together with some one.
Ki-ngwen-á, we consult each other.	I-ngwen-a-na, you consult each other.
Ki-ngwen-até, we consulted each other.	I-ngwen-ate, you consulted each other.

Examples of the reciprocal forms of derivatives :

A-boit-u-nore, I arrive here together with some one.	I-boit-u-nore-re, you arrive here together with some one.
A-ta-boit-u-nore, I arrived here together with some one.	I-ta-boit-u-nore, you arrived here together with some one.
Ki-boit-u-nyí, we arrive here with each other.	I-boit-u-nyi-nyi, you arrive here with each other.
Ki-ta-boit-u-nyí, we arrived here with each other.	I-ta-boit-u-nyi, you arrived here with each other.
A-ishi-aki-nore, I am opposite to some one.	I-nji-aki-nore-re, you are opposite to some one.
A-ishi-aki-nore, I was opposite to some one.	I-nji-aki-nore, you were opposite to some one.
Ki-nji-aki-nó, we are opposite to one another.	I-nji-aki-no-no, you are opposite to one another.
Ki-nji-aki-nôte, we were opposite to one another.	I-nji-aki-nôte, you were opposite to one another.

In a few verbs the reciprocal form is made by affixing ye (ie after r). This form is invariable, except in the second person plural of the present tense, when the last syllable is doubled. Examples :

A-ñgár-ie, I eat together with some one.	I-ñgar-ié-ye, you eat together with some one.
A-ta-ñgár-ie, I ate together with some one.	I-ta-ñgár-ie, you ate together with some one.
A-iró-rie, I speak with some one.	I-'ro-rié-ye, you speak with some one.
A-iró-rie, I spoke with some one.	I-'ró-rie, you spoke with some one.
A-isē-ye, I touch (together with) something.	I-'sē-yē-ye, you touch (together with) something.
A-isē-ye, I touched (together with) something.	I-'sē-ye, you touched (together with) something.

A-inyanyuk-ye, I have resemblance with some one or I resemble some one.	I-'nyanyuk-yē-ye, you resemble some one.
A-inyanyuk-ye, I resembled some one.	I-'nyanyuk-ye, you resembled some one.

CAUSATIVES.

The rule for the formation of causatives is that all verbs which commence with any letter except i or e take the prefix it followed by a vowel, and are conjugated like the verbs from which they are derived. All simple verbs commencing with i or e take the affix ye, while derivatives take nye or rie. This affix is invariable, except in the second person plural of the present indicative, when the last syllable is doubled. Examples of verbs not commencing with i or e:

A-suj, to follow.	A-itu-suj, to cause to follow.
A-suj-u, to follow hither, to come towards.	A-itu-suj-u, to cause to follow hither.
A-suj-aa, to follow thither.	A-itu-suj-aa, to cause to follow thither.
A-suj-aki, to follow for.	A-itu-suj-aki, to cause to follow for.
A-gor-o, to be angry.	A-ita-gor-o, to cause to be angry.
A-rap-osh-o, to have enough to eat.	A-ita-rap-osh-o, to cause to have enough to eat.
A-suj-are, to follow together with some one.	A-itu-suj-are, to cause to follow together with some one.

Examples of verbs commencing with i or e:

A-isuj, to wash (tr.).	A-isuj-ye, to cause to wash (tr.).
A-el, to anoint.	A-el-ye, to cause to anoint, to rub on.
A-ishi-u, to recover.	A-ishi-u-nye, to cause to recover, to cure.
A-isud-oo, to hide.	A-isud-ō-rie, to cause to hide.
A-iro-rōki, to greet.	A-iro-rōki-nye, to cause to greet.
A-isuj-a, to bathe.	A-isuj-á-rie, to cause to bathe.
A-isuj-ish-o, to wash (intr.).	A-isuj-ish-ō-ye, to cause to wash (intr.).
A-igwen-are, to consult together with some one.	A-igwen-á-rie, to cause to consult together with some one.

As causatives of the first class commence with i, they take no prefix in the past tense. The affixes employed in conjugating these verbs are the same as the affixes of the simple verb from which the causative is derived :

A-itu-suj, I cause (him) to follow.	I-ndu-suj-uju, you cause (him) to follow.
A-itu-suj-a, I caused (him) to follow.	I-ndu-suj-a, you caused (him) to follow.
A-itu-suj-u, I cause (him) to follow hither.	I-ndu-suj-u-ju, you cause (him) to follow hither.
A-itu-suj-u-a, I caused (him) to follow hither.	I-ndu-suj-u-tua, you caused (him) to follow hither.
A-itu-suj-aa, I cause (him) to follow thither.	I-ndu-suj-aa, you cause (him) to follow thither.
A-itu-suj-aiye, I caused (him) to follow thither.	I-ndu-suj-aiye, you caused (him) to follow thither.
A-itu-suj-aki, I cause (him) to follow for.	I-ndu-suj-aki-ki, you cause (him) to follow for.
A-itu-suj-aka, I caused (him) to follow for.	I-ndu-suj-akitya, you caused (him) to follow for.
A-ita-gor-o, I cause (him) to be angry.	I-nda-gor-o-ro, you cause (him) to be angry.
A-ita-gor-e, I caused (him) to be angry.	I-nda-gor-ōte, you caused him to be angry.
A-ita-rap-osh-o, I cause (him) to have enough to eat.	I-nda-rap-osh-ō-sho, you cause (him) to have enough to eat.
A-ita-rap-osh-e, I caused (him) to have enough to eat.	I-nda-rap-osh-ōte, you caused (him) to have enough to eat.
A-itu-suj-are, I cause (him) to follow together with some one.	I-ndu-suj-are-re, you cause (him) to follow together with some one.
A-itu-suj-are, I caused (him) to follow together with some one.	I-ndu-suj-are, you caused (him) to follow together with some one.

As stated above, the second class is invariable, except in the second person plural of the present indicative, when the last syllable is doubled :

A-isuj-ye, I cause (him) to wash (him).	I-'suj-ye-ye, you cause (him) to wash (him).
A-isuj-ye, I caused (him) to wash (him).	I-'suj-ye, you caused (him) to wash (him).
A-ishi-u-nye, I cure (him).	I-nji-u-nyē-ye, you cure (him).
A-ishi-u-nye, I cured (him).	I-nji-u-nye, you cured (him).
A-isuj-ish-o-nye, I cause (him) to wash.	I-'suj-ish-o-nyē-ye, you cause (him) to wash.
A-isuj-ish-o-nye, I caused (him) to wash.	I-'suj-ish-o-nye, you caused (him) to wash.

A-igwen-árie, I cause (him) to consult together with some one.	I-ngwen-arié-ye, you cause (him) to consult together with some one.
A-igwen-árie, I caused (him) to consult together with some one.	I-ngwen-árie, you caused (him) to consult together with some one.

THE PASSIVE VOICE.

Causative verbs of the first class form their passives in the usual manner according to the verbs from which they are derived, the affix for the present tense being i, ni, or ri, and for the past tense eki, *nieki*¹, or rieki:

Á-itu-suj-i nanu, it is caused to me to follow or I am caused to follow.	Á-itu-suj-eki nanu, it was caused to me to follow or I was caused to follow.
Á-itu-suj-u-ni nanu, it is caused to me to follow hither or I am caused to follow hither.	Á-itu-suj-u-nieki, it was caused to me to follow hither or I was caused to follow hither.

Causative verbs of the second class form the passive by affixing ki to the active voice. This form is unchangeable for all tenses:

Á-isuj-ye-ki nanu, it is or was caused to me to wash or I am or was caused to wash (it).
Á-isud-o-rie-ki nanu, it is or was caused to me to hide or I am or was caused to hide (it).

THE DATIVE FORM OF CAUSATIVES.

The dative form of causative verbs of the first class is made by the affix ye (in derivatives nye or rie):

A-itu-suj, to cause to follow.	A-itu-suj-ye, to cause to follow to (a place).
A-itu-suj-u, to cause to follow hither.	A-itu-suj-u-nye, to cause to follow hither to (a place).
A-itu-suj-aa, to cause to follow thither.	A-itu-suj-árie, to cause to follow thither to (a place).
A-itu-suj-aki, to cause to follow for.	A-itu-suj-aki-nye, to cause to follow for (some one) to (a place).
A-ita-gor-o, to cause to be angry.	A-ita-gór-ie, to cause to be angry with.
A-ita-rap-osh-o, to cause to have enough to eat.	A-ita-rap-osh-ō-ye, to cause to have enough to eat for.
A-itu-suj-are, to cause to follow together with some one.	A-itu-suj-árie, to cause to follow together with some one for.

Causative verbs of the second class make their dative forms by inserting i before the final ie or ye:

A-isuj-ye, to cause to wash.	A-isuj-iye, to cause to wash for.
A-isud-ó-rie, to cause to hide.	A-isud-o-riye, to cause to hide for.
A-irur-á-rie, to cause to lie down.	A-irur-a-riye, to cause to lie down with.
A-iruk-ish-ye, to cause to reply.	A-iruk-ish-iye, to cause to reply for.

The passive voice of the dative form of causative verbs is made by affixing ki to the active:

Á-itu-suj-ye-ki nanu, it is or was caused to me to follow to (a place) or I am or was caused to follow to (a place).
Á-isuj-iye-ki nanu, it is or was caused to me to wash for (some one) or I am or was caused to wash for (some one).

NEUTER VERBS.

Most neuter verbs, and particularly those which in English must be translated by an adjective or adverb and the verb to be or to become, form a class to themselves. With perhaps one exception (a-itashe, to stand), all these verbs possess a future, but in many instances there is no present, the present tense of the verb to be with an adjective being used instead. Example:

A-ra sidai, I am beautiful.	A-ti-sida-na, I was beautiful.
A-sida-nu, I shall be beautiful.

When a neuter verb terminates in a vowel, the affixes of all the tenses are generally joined to the root by j, n, or r:

Present.

When the present exists, it is formed as in simple verbs by adding the personal prefixes to the root, and in the second person plural by doubling the last syllable:

A-gol, I am strong, hard, difficult, &c.	I-gol-igolo, you are strong.
A-irōua, I am hot.	I-'rōua-ua, you are hot.

Past.

The singular affix of the past tense is a or o; the plural ita or ito, and in one or two instances tia:

A-ta-gol-o, I was strong.	Ki-ta-gol-itó, we were strong.
A-irōua-ja, I was hot.	Ki-'rōua-jitá, we were hot.
A-ti-lili-a, I stank.	Ki-ti-lili-tiá, we stank.

Future.

The future affix is u. In the second person plural the last syllable is doubled:

A-gol-u, I shall be strong.	I-gol-u-lu, you will be strong.
A-irōua-ju, I shall be hot.	I-'rōua-ju-ju, you will be hot.

IMPERATIVE AND SUBJUNCTIVE.

The affixes of the imperative and subjunctive are similar to those of the past tense. When the root ends in a consonant, the plural affix is added to the singular affix:

IMPERATIVE.

Ta-gol-o, be strong.	En-da-gol-ōito, be ye strong.
I-'rōua-ja, be hot.	E-'rōua-jita, be ye hot.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-ta-gol-o, that I may be strong.	Maa-ta-gol-ōitó, that we may be strong.
Ma-irōua-ja, that I may be hot.	Má-irōua-jitá, that we may be hot.

INFINITIVES.

The affixes of the future¹ or of the imperative and subjunctive are used in the formation of the infinitive.

A-gol-u, } to be strong.	Aa-gol-u, } to be strong.
A-ta-gol-o, } to be strong.	Aa-ta-gol-ōito, } to be strong.
A-irōua-ju, } to be hot.	Á-irōua-ju, } to be hot.
A-irōua-ja, } to be hot.	Á-irōua-jita, } to be hot.

The causative form of neuter verbs is made in the usual manner:

A-ita-gol-u, to make strong.	A-ita-gol-ye, to make strong for.
A-irōua-ju-nye, to make hot.	A-irōua-ju-niye, to make hot for.

A few transitive verbs are conjugated like neuter verbs:

Present.

A-ure, I fear (him).	I-urē-re, you fear (him).
----------------------	---------------------------

Past.

A-t-uri-a, I feared (him).	I-t-uri-aita or } you feared (him).
	I-t-ure-ita, }

Future.

A-urē-yu, I shall fear (him).	I-urē-yu-yu, you will fear (him).
-------------------------------	-----------------------------------

The intransitive form of these verbs is made in the regular manner by affixing -sh to the stem:

A-urē-sh-o, I fear.	I-urē-sh-ō-sho, you fear.
A-t-urē-sh-e, I feared.	I-t-urē-sh-ō-te, you feared.

¹ The root is sometimes employed instead of the future: e. g. a-gol, to be strong.

AUXILIARY AND IRREGULAR VERBS.

As many of the auxiliary verbs are also irregular, it will be well to speak of their irregularities first, and afterwards of their use in making compound verbs.

There exist a few verbs which, although they commence with letters other than i or e, form their past tense without the aid of the prefix t and a vowel. Such are:

A-kwet, to run.	A-kwet-a, I ran.
A-to-yu, to be dry.	A-to-yo, I was dry.
A-liō-yu, to be visible.	A-lio, I was visible.
A-keny-u, to rise (of the sun).	E-keny-u-a, it rose.
A-ō-ku, to ripen.	A-o, I ripened.

There are also a few verbs which commence with i and take the prefix t and a vowel:

A-ias, to do.	A-ta-'as-a, I did.
A-i-u, to bear.	A-tō-ī-u-o, I bore.
A-igh, to hang up.	A-ti-igh-a, I hung up.
A-ij-ēyu, to swell.	A-te-ij-a, I swelled.
A-ij-oo, to swallow.	A-tō-ij-oiye, I swallowed.
A-iñgu-a, to come from, leave thither.	A-tu-ñgw-aiye, I came from.
A-iyōlō-u, to know.	A-ta-iyōlo, I knew.
A-iyō-u, to wish.	A-ta-iyō-u-o, I wished.

The following verbs are irregular:

A-a, to be.	A-wē-yu, to bleed, to leak.
A-aku, to become.	A-iba-yu, to hate.
A-ā, to die.	A-iñgu-a, to come from, leave thither.
A-ata, to have.	A-iny-ōtōto, to awake.
A-lo, to go.	A-itu, to return hither.
A-lōtu, to come.	A-iya, to take, take away.
A-nya, to eat.	A-iya-u, to bring.
A-nyokyē-nu, to be red.	A-iyō-u, to wish.
A-rok-u, to be black.	A-iyōlō-u, to know.
A-ton, to sit, stay.	A-tum, to get, to obtain, to see, to meet.

The verbs a-a, to be, and a-aku, to become, have several peculiarities. The former may be said to have two present tenses, and the latter one, whilst both verbs have the same form for the past tense. The letter a may be used for all persons of the singular, and aa for the plural of the verb to be when not followed by a substantive or adjective:

A iye ō-ṭa-a enna-bae ? is it thou who did this matter ?
Aa 'yook, lello, it is we (these).

PASSIVE¹.Present.

Aa-pwōn-u-ni nanu, it is come to me. E-pwōn-u-ni 'yook, it is come to us.

Past.

Aa-ētūō-ki nanu, it was come to me. E-ētūō-ki 'yook, it was come to us.

A-ton, to sit, stay, live.

Present.

A-ton, I sit.

Ki-ton-í, we sit.

I-ton, thou sittest.

I-ton-i-ni, you sit.

E-ton, he sits.

E-ton-i, they sit.

A-ton-ita, I am sitting.

I-ton-ita-ta, you are sitting.

Past.

A-to-ton-a, I sat.

Ki-to-ton-ió, we sat.

IMPERATIVE.

To-ton-a, sit.

En-do-ton-i, sit ye.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

Ma-to-ton-a, that I may sit.

Maa-to-ton-í, that we may sit.

To-ton-a, that thou mayest sit.

En-do-ton-i, that you may sit.

Me-to-ton-a, that he may sit.

Me-to-ton-i, that they may sit.

INFINITIVES.

A-ton, }
A-to-ton-a, } to sit.

Aa-ton-i, }
Aa-to-ton-i, } to sit.

PASSIVE.

Present.

Aa-ton-ii nanu, I am seated.

E-ton-ii 'yook, we are seated.

Past.

Aa-ton-aki nanu, I was seated.

E-ton-aki 'yook, we were seated.

A-itu, to return hither (intr.).

A-itu, I return hither.

Ki-itú, we return hither.

I-itu, thou returnest hither.

I-itu-tu, you return hither.

E-itu, he or she returns hither.

E-itu, they return hither.

A-ito, to return thither (intr.), is conjugated in a similar way:

A-ito, I return thither.

I-itō-to, you return thither.

There is no past tense, and the past tenses of a-inyia-k-u and a-inyia-ya, to return hither and thither (transitive), are occasionally used instead:

The dative form of these verbs followed by the infinitive or the narrative tense is used to express repetition of an action.

A-itō-ki alo, }
A-itō-ki n-a-lo, } I go again.

A-inyia-ka a-lo, }
A-inyia-ka n-a-lo, } I went again.

¹ The affix of the first and third persons plural of the present are the same as the second person.

² A-tu-ñg-a-ye is also used.

³ The first letter of the root falls out in the third person of all tenses. Examples: e-ya, he, she, or they take; e-ya-u, he, she, or they bring. There are two forms for the imperative of a-ya-u, to bring: i-ya-u or a-u and e-ya-u-tu or a-tu. The imperative of to take is 'ya-wa in the singular, 'ya-wa-ita in the plural.

⁴ The past tense is rarely used, the present followed by opa, formerly, being generally employed instead. In the third person plural of the present and future the last letter is doubled as in the second person plural: e-iyē-u-u and e-yō-u-u.

AUXILIARY VERBS.

The verbs used as auxiliaries are :

A-aku, to become.	A-tum, to get, to obtain, &c.
A-ata, to have.	A-ri-ki-no, to forget.
A-isho, to give.	A-urē-yu, to fear.
A-lo, to go.	A-any, to refuse.
A-lōtu, to come.	A-dol, to see.
A-idim, to be able.	A-la-iki-no, to be unable, be- come conquered.
A-idip, to finish.	A-itu, to return hither.
A-iyōlō-u, to know.	A-ton, to sit, stay.
A-itē-u, to venture.

Can, may, and might are represented by the appropriate tenses of a-idim, to be able. Must is expressed by the third person singular of the negative present of a-ata, to have, joined to injere, that, and followed by another negative :

M-e-ata 'njere m-a-lo, } I must go.
M-e-ata 'njere eitu a-lo, }

Ought and should are translated by the third person singular of the present or past tenses of a-nare, to please, or a-nyor, to love. After the former the simple present is generally used and after the latter the narrative tense.

E-nare a-lo, } I ought to go. E-ta-nare a-lo, } I ought to E-nyor n-a-lo, } E-to-nyor-a n-a-lo, } have gone.

A-aku, to become.

The third person singular of the present tense of a-aku, to become, is used to strengthen the conditional tenses and to assist in the formation of several other tenses :

- Ten e-aku a-suj, if it comes to pass that I follow him.
- Ten e-aku a-suj-ita, if it comes to pass that I am following him.
- Ore p'e-aku a-suj, now and it comes to pass I follow him or while I was following him.
- Ore p'e-aku a-tu-suj-a, I having followed him.
- Ore p'e-aku a-idip-a a-tu-suj-a, I having already followed him.
- E-aku a-suj, I shall be in the act of following him.
- E-aku a-tu-suj-a, I shall have followed him.
- E-aku a-idip-a a-tu-suj-a, I shall have already followed him.

The third person singular of the past tense of a-aku, to become, followed by the relative adverb of time, is used to translate such phrases as about to, on the point of, shortly, &c. :

- E-ta-a en-n-alo (it became when I go), I am or was about to start.
- E-ta-a en-n-e-dō-yo eng-oloñg (it became when it descends thither the sun), the sun is or was on the point of setting.

E-ta-a en-n-e-duñg-o ol-tuñgani ol-tau (it became when he cuts himself the man the spirit), the man is or was on the point of death.

A-ata, to have.

A-ata, to have, is used as an auxiliary in the present and past contingent tenses :

Ana'-'ata a-suj, I should follow Ana'-'ata a-tu-suj-a, I should have followed him.

A-isho, to give, to give permission, to allow.

The imperative of the verb a-isho, to give, followed by the indicative or subjunctive is much used as a substitute for the simple imperative:

I-njo-o e-suj or I-njo-o m-e-tu- Mi-ki-njo a-suj, do not let me suj-a, let him follow him. follow him.

With some verbs the imperative negative is never used without the help of a-isho, to give :

Mi-njo ki-ri-kī-no (do not give that it forgets to thee), do not forget.

A-isho is frequently employed to translate to do something :

Eisho 'l-Maasae, the Masai do as follows.

N-e-isho e-irur-a eng-ae, and she does this whilst the other is sleeping.

A-lo, to go, and a-lōtu, to come.

These verbs followed by the infinitive are much used as a substitute for the future, which is often wanting :

A-lo a-suj, I go to follow (him) Ki-pwó aa-suj, we go to follow or I shall follow (him). (him) or we shall follow (him).

Aa-pwei aa-suj nanu, it is gone E-pwei aa-suj iyook, it is gone to to me to be followed or I shall us to be followed or we shall be be followed. followed.

Aa-shōmō-ki aa-suj nanu, it E-shōmō-ki aa-suj iyook, it was was gone to me to be followed gone to us to be followed or or I shall have been followed. we shall have been followed.

A-lōtu a-suj-u, I come to follow Ki-pwōnú aa-suj-u, we come to (him) hither or I shall follow follow (him) hither or we shall
(him) hither. follow (him) hither.

Aa-pwōn-u-ni aa-suj-u nanu, it E-pwōnu-ni aa-suj-u 'yook, it is is come to me to be followed come to us to be followed hither hither or I shall be followed or we shall be followed hither.

Aa-ētūō-ki aa-suj-u nanu, it E-ētūō-ki aa-suj-u 'yook, it was was come to me to be followed come to us to be followed hither hither or I shall have been or we shall have been followed followed hither. hither.

A-idim, to be able, a-idip, to finish, a-iyōlō-u, to know, and a-itē-u, to venture.

The infinitive formed like the past tense is invariably used after these four verbs :

E-idim-u	} a-tu-suj-a,	{	he will be able to follow (him).
E-idip			he (will) finish following (him).
E-iyōlō-u			he will know how to follow (him).
E-itē-u			he (will) venture to follow (him).

A-idip may often be translated by already, and a-dip-ayu by ready.

E-idip-a a-shōmo, he has already gone.

E-idip-a a-tua, he is already dead.

K-e-idip-ate 'n-giri? is the meat ready?

A-tum, to get, to obtain, to see, to succeed, to meet.

This verb is usually followed by the infinitive formed like the past tense :

A-tum a-tu-suj-a, I succeed in following him.

A-noto a-tu-suj-a, I succeeded in following him.

If, however, emphasis is laid on any special word, the present tense may be used instead :

I-tum i-suj, thou gettest him if thou followest him.

A-ri-kī-no, to forget, a-urē-yu, to fear, a-any, to refuse, a-dol, to see, a-la-ikī-no, to be unable.

These verbs can be followed by the infinitive formed like the past tense or by the present indicative :

E-ri-kī-nō-yu	} e-suj, or a-tu-suj-a,	{	he will forget	} to follow him.
E-urē-yu			he will fear
E-any			he refuses
E-dol			he (will) see
E-la-ikī-no			he is unable

A-itu, to return hither.

The third person singular of a-itu, to return hither, is employed in the formation of the past negative tense :

Eitu a-suj, I did not follow him.

A-ton, to sit, stay, live.

The third person singular of the present tense of a-ton, to sit, is used to express yet and still, and, combined with e-itu, not yet. In derivative verbs this form is frequently used as a substitute for the imperfect and progressive present :

Eton a-suj, I still follow (him).

Eton a-suj-ita, I am still following (him).

Eton a-suj-aa, I am following (him) thither.

Eton eitu a-suj, I have not yet followed (him).

REDUPLICATION.

Doubling a verb often gives an idea of thoroughness :

A-idum, } to jump.	A-idum-udum, } to jump about.
A-ityam, }	A-ityam-ityam, }
A-duñg, to cut.	A-duñg-uduñg, to cut up.
A-irub, to join.	A-irub-urub, to join thoroughly.
A-iñgor-u, to look hither, to seek.	A-iñgor-iñgor-u, to seek everywhere.

In some verbs, however, the meaning is changed when the root is doubled :

A-ilep, to climb.	A-ilep-ilep, to make a noise.
A-lep, to milk.	A-lep-elep, to play with a cow's udder preparatory to milking.
A-sai, to pray.	A-sai-sai, to be on the point of giving birth.

A few verbs are only used in the reduplicated form :

A-idetidet, to dream.	A-ikirikir-a, to tremble.
A-ibelibel, to shake.	A-ikitikit, to tickle.
A-irisiris, to dribble.

ADVERBS.

With the exception of interrogatives all adverbs in Masai follow the verbs they qualify :

I-ro-ro akiti, speak slowly.	A-shōmo duo añg, I went a short while ago to the kraal.
Ki-ton-í peno, we (will) wait a little.	A-lo taata, I am going now.
Ki-ór aitoris, we (shall) divide it equally.	Aa-ta-ar-aki pesho, I have been beaten for nothing.

Substantives without the article may be used as adverbs, and verbs with or without the relatives are commonly employed in an adverbial sense :

Keper, shumata, above.	Etaana, { it is near, } near
Abōri, below.	or { or } or
Wēji, somewhere.	En-netaana, { where it is near, } soon.
Kwapi, abroad.	Asiōki, asiēku, asiōyo, aisarisara, (to do) quickly.
Lughunya, before.	Aitōki, (to do) again.
Kurum, behind.
Elakwa, { it is far, } far.
or { or }
En-nelakwa, { where it is far, }

Adjectives can also be used as adverbs :

Kiti, little.	Torono, ill.
Kitok, much.	Sidai, supat, well.

Many English adverbs may be translated by naleñg¹, very :

Kwet-a naleñg, run fast. I-'niniñg-o naleñg, listen well.
I-ngo naleñg, hold tight. Ta-ar-a naleñg, strike hard.

Naleñg is also employed for the comparison of adverbs :

I-'ro-ro akiti naleñg, speak very slowly.
E-itobir-a sidai naleñg, he did it most beautifully.

The following is a list of the principal adverbs :

Adverbs of Time.

Taata, to-day or now.	Peno, eñgór-peno, soon.
Duo, now, lately, or a short while ago.	Taisere, to-morrow.
Akenya, adde, presently, afterwards.	Ñgole, yesterday.
Opa, formerly.	Sii, again.
Opa moite, long since.	Taata 'nji, instantly.
	Ōshii, ōshi-ake, always.

Compound words are frequently used as adverbs of time :

Kunna-oloñgi (these-days), nowadays.
Idya-ae-oloñg (that-other-day), the day before yesterday, the day after to-morrow.
Kat'-are (time-two), again.
Kataitin kumok (times-many), often.
'Ng-oloñgi-pôkin (the-days-all), always.

There are no true adverbs of place. Sentences beginning in English with whither, where, and whence, are expressed by verbal forms combined with the relative; substantives without the article take the place of such words as above, abroad, beneath, &c.; and here and there are expressed by the demonstratives enne or inne and ende or idyé, or, if joined to the verb to be, by a-tii.

A-iyōlo en-n-i-lo,	} I know where you are going.
A-iyōlo e-wēji n-i-lo,
A-lo wēji, I am going somewhere.
E-tii atwa (he is there interior), he is inside.
A-ta-dua e-tii enne (I saw him he is there this), I saw him here.
E-ta-dō-fkio idyé, he fell there.

The principal adverbs of manner are :

Nēja, inji, thus.	Eitu, not, not yet.
Ake, only.	Ee, yes.
Naleñg, very, &c.	Katukul, katukulye, altogether,
Mme, no.	indeed.

¹ The Northern Masai often use the full form of this word, which is the feminine relative of the verb a-leñg, to be good, viz. o-leñg, na-leñg, oo-leñg, naa-leñg.

The principal adverbs of interrogation are :

(K) ¹ aji ?	} how ?	Anaa anu ? how long ago ?
K ? Ka ? or Kaa ?		(K) aji e-tiu pe ?
Kodee ? or Koree ? where ?	} why ?	(K) ana i-jo ?
(K) aji ? where ? whence ?		(K) ainyô pe ?
whither ?		(K) aja ? how much ? how many ?
(K) anu ? when ?

Adverbs of interrogation are placed at the commencement of the sentence.

How ?

(K) aji a-iko enna ? how (shall) I do this ?

Kaa, en-dōki ai anake en-ino ?	} (how, the thing mine or the thine ?) is this thing mine or thine ?
K-en-dōki ai anake en-ino ?

How ? is sometimes expressed by affixing a to a verb or other part of speech, or by the use of the verb a-ba-ya, to arrive thither :

K-a-jō-ki-a 'ndae ? how (shall) I tell you ?

K-e-ba-ya-a te-'ng-adoro ? (it arrives thither how with the length ?) how long (or tall) is it ?

I-ba-ya-a te-'ng-itoo ? (thou arrivest thither how with the age ?) how old art thou ?

K-e-ba-ya-a eng-oloŋ ? (it arrives thither how the sun ?)	} what o'clock is it ?
(K) aji e-tii eng-oloŋ ? (where it is there the sun ?)

En-ai enna-tōki, en-ino 'njeri-a ? this thing is mine, what or how is thine ?

Eng-anyit enye 'njeri-a ? (how is his honour ?) what honour is due to him ?

Where ?

Kodee ol-tuŋgani ? where (is) the man ?

Kodee ninye ? (where he ?)	} where is he ?
(K) aji e-tii ? ² (where he is there ?)

(K) aji i-lo ? where art thou going ?

(K) aji i-'ŋgu-a ? whence comest thou ?

The applied form is used after (k) aji ? followed by a verb :

(K) aji i-lo a-inos-ye en-daa ? where art thou going to eat thy food ?

(K) aji i-lo a-lilit-are ? where art thou going to walk ?

When ?

(K) anu i-lo ? when art thou going ?

How long ago ?

Anaa anu etii ? (how long ago he is there ?) how long has he been there ?

¹ K is frequently prefixed to words as a sign of interrogation.

² E-tii aji means, he is at home (lit. he is there hut).

Why?

- (K) aji e-tiu pe i-ndobir enna? (how is it like and thou preparest this?) why dost thou prepare this?
 (K) ana i-jo i-ndobir enna? (if thou sayest and thou preparest this?) why dost thou prepare this?
 (K) ainyô pe¹ i-ndobir enna? (what and thou preparest this?) why dost thou prepare this?

How much? how many?

Kaja? how much? how many?

When aja? is treated as an adjective, it follows the substantive it qualifies. If followed by a verb, it requires a relative with it:

Il-tuñganak aja oo-inos en-daa? how many men will eat food?

The Masai have a word for to buy (a-inyañg-u), but they have no word for to sell. When asking the price of anything, the Swahili words pesa and rupia followed by aja? are the terms generally employed nowadays:

'M-besai aja? how many pice } (does it cost)?
 'Rupiani² aja? how many rupees }

Other forms, which can be used for both purchasing and selling, are shown in the following examples:

- (K) ainyô i-inos-ye enna-tôki? (what you cause to eat this thing?) what will you sell this thing for? or what will you pay for this thing?
 (K) ainyô i-mir? (what you drive it away?) what will you sell it for?
 (K) ainyô i-nda-kwet-ye enna-tôki? (what do you make to run to this thing?) what will you pay for this thing?
 (K) ainyô i-nda-wal-ye enna-tôki? (what you cause to change to this thing?) what will you exchange this thing for?

CONJUNCTIONS.

Conjunctions are often dispensed with by the use of the narrative or conditional tenses. And, but, or other mere connective is translated by the former; if, when, and other conjunctions introducing a state, by one of the latter.

The principal conjunctions are:

O ³ , and, with.	Araki, anake, ana, or asho, or.
Ore, now, and.	Amu, for.
Pe, and, in order that, so that.	Take, but.

² 'Ng-oshola, copper, lead, is sometimes used for 'Rupiani.

³ When followed by a plural substantive o becomes oo (vide p. 16). Oo is also frequently used for o when followed by a singular substantive com-

Sii, again, also.	Ajo (pl. aajo), that.
Naa, then.	Anaa, like.
Ōnaa or taa, well, and so, accordingly, and then, &c.	Ōmaa-amu, since, because.
Eitu, before, ere.	Nēji,	} because.
Injere ¹ , provided that.	Nēji-amu,
	Ti-araki (pl. endi-araki),

PREPOSITIONS.

There appear to be no real prepositions in Masai. Simple prepositions such as at, by, for, from, in, on, out, to, and with, &c., are expressed by the local case; and compound prepositions are rendered by compound phrases. Examples:

Ten eidipayu (when it shall become finished), after.	Te-polos, between, through.
Leme or neme (and it is not), except.	Te-idye, beyond.
Te-lughunya, ahead.	Ti-álo, in the direction of, beside.
Te-kurum, behind.	Ti-aulo, outside (the kraal).
	Te-boo, outside (the hut).
	Ti-atwa, within or inside.

As with adverbs, substantives without the article may sometimes be used as prepositions:

E-tii atwa aji, he is in the hut. E-tii álo aji, he is beside the hut.

INTERJECTIONS.

There are a large number of interjections, many of which are very difficult to express in writing as they are often only half-articulate sounds.

The most usual interjections are given in the following list:

	Singular.		Plural.
	Masc.	Fem.	Masc.	Fem.
Of address:	e-iro	na-iro na-ito ²	} 'l-oiye	na-toiye.

A man replies oi, woi, oe, or oo; a woman, äu. (Vide pp. 15 and 284.)

Of greeting: sōpai takwenya endasōpai endakwenya.

The reply is hēpa or ighó (vide p. 284.) mencing with a consonant, e.g. menyē oo ñgotonye, his father and mother, for menyē o ñgotonye, whilst o is generally used for oo when followed by a vowel, e.g. il-doinyo o añgat, the mountains and plains, for il-doinyo oo añgat. O and oo used in conjunction with the subjunctive are equivalent to until.

¹ Injere becomes injeri when followed by a, e.g. injeri-a? how? (vide p. 99.)

² Old men only may use na-ito.

Masai warrior, showing pig-tail.

THE STORY OF THE HARE AND THE ELEPHANTS.

A hare that lived near a river one day saw some elephants going to the kraals of their fathers-in-law. He said to the biggest one, who was carrying a bag of honey: 'Father, ferry me across, for I am a poor person.'

The elephant told him to get on his back, and when he had climbed up, they started.

While they were crossing the river, the hare ate the honey, and as he was eating it, he let some of the juice fall on to the elephant's back. On being asked what he was dropping, he replied that he was weeping, and that it was the tears of a poor child that were falling. When they reached the opposite bank, the hare asked the elephants to give him some stones to throw at the birds.

He was given some stones, and he put them into the honey bag. He then asked to be set down, and as soon as he was on the ground again he told the elephants to be off.

They continued their journey until they reached the kraal of the big one's father-in-law, where they opened the honey bag. When they found that the stones had been substituted for the honey, they jumped up and returned to search for the hare, whom they found feeding. As they approached, however, the hare saw them, and entered a hole. The elephants followed him, and the biggest one thrust his trunk into the hole, and seized him by the leg, whereupon the hare said: 'I think you have caught hold of a root.' On hearing this the elephant let go his leg and seized a root. The hare then cried out: 'You have broken me, you have broken me,' which made the elephant pull all the harder until at length he became tired.

While the elephant was pulling at the root, the hare slipped out of the hole and ran away. As he ran, he met some baboons, and called out to them to help him. They inquired why he was running so fast, and he replied that he was being chased by a great big person. The baboons told him to go and sit down, and promised not to give him up. The hare entered the baboons' lair whilst they sat down outside and waited. Presently the elephant arrived, and asked if the hare had passed that way. The baboons inquired whether he would give them anything if they pointed out the hare's hiding-place. The elephant said he would give them whatever they asked for, and when they said they wanted a cup full of his blood, he consented to give it them, after satisfying himself that the cup was small. The baboons then shot an arrow into his neck, and the blood gushed forth.

After the elephant had lost a considerable quantity of blood, he inquired if the cup was not full. But the baboons had made a hole in the bottom, and when the elephant looked at it, he saw that it was still half empty. The baboons jeered at him, and said he had no courage, so he told them to fill the cup.

They continued to bleed him, but still the cup would not fill, and at length he sank exhausted to the ground and died.

The hare having nothing more to fear was then able to leave his hiding-place.

THE STORY OF THE WARRIORS AND THE DEVIL.

Two young brothers once lived together with their parents. In course of time they grew up, were circumcised, and became warriors.

One day their father gave them a bullock, and told them to go and slaughter it; but they decided that they could only slaughter it in a place where there was no man, or animal, or bird, or insect, or anything living. They therefore took their spears, shields, swords, and clubs, and went to look for such a place.

After searching unsuccessfully for five months they entered a big forest where there was no living creature. They waited for a few days, and then, as they could not find anything that had life, they built a slaughter-house, and slaughtered their bullock.

After they had killed the animal, the elder one gave his brother the stomach, and told him to go and draw some water. The younger one went to the river, but when he drew the water, it cried out: 'He has drawn me, he has drawn me.' He was much frightened and ran away, and as he ran, the forest laughed. He related what had occurred to his brother, who told him to spit as he was a coward. The elder one took the stomach of the ox himself, and went to the river, when the water called out as before: 'He has drawn me, he has drawn me.' He replied: 'Yes, I have drawn you on purpose,' and took the water back with him.

The younger brother was then sent to cut wood, but when he took hold of the tree, the firewood cried out: 'He has broken me, he has broken me.' Again much alarmed he returned to the slaughter-house, and told his brother that the firewood had rebuked him. His brother did the same as on the other occasion: he called the younger warrior a coward, and told him to spit; he then took his sword, and went to cut the firewood. The firewood cried out when he cut it, but the warrior replied that he was cutting it on purpose, and took it back with him.

On his arrival he told his brother to go and cut some skewers. When he cut them, however, the skewers cried out: 'He has cut us, he has cut us.' He left them and ran back to the kraal to tell his brother, who again called him a coward, and told him to spit, whilst he went himself to cut the skewers. The same thing happened as before. The skewers cried out on being cut, but the warrior told them he had done it on purpose, and returned with them to the slaughter-house.

The warriors then roasted some meat and had a meal, after which they went to sleep.

During the night a devil came and put out their fire. He then lit his eye, which resembled a fire, and lay down. Later on the elder warrior woke up his brother, and told him to make up the fire. The younger one got up and seized the devil's eye, thinking it was a brand. The devil thereupon swallowed him, and went away, while the elder warrior cried after him: 'Go now, but to-morrow I will look for you.'

At dawn he started off in pursuit, and when he found the devil, he noticed that he had nine heads and a very big toe.

The devil told the warrior to go away, and said he did not wish to hurt him as he was brave. The warrior refused, however, and told the devil he wanted to fight. The devil rushed at him, and tried to kick him, but the warrior caught the kick on his shield, and cut off one of his adversary's heads. The devil then fled, and the warrior called out to him that he would return on the morrow, after which he went back to the slaughter-house, and rested.

The next day he followed up the devil, and in the fight which ensued cut off another head. The devil ran away again, and the warrior told him that he would return the following morning to kill him.

When he came to the spot the next day, he found the devil very weak from losing two of his heads, and he easily dispatched him, after which he cut off the big toe. Every kind of animal came out from the toe, and last of all came the warrior's brother.

The two returned to their slaughter-house and rested for three days, at the end of which the younger warrior asked his brother to take him home, as he was afraid to remain there any longer.

THE STORY OF THE WARRIOR AND HIS SISTERS, OR WHY FREE LOVE IS PERMITTED AMONG THE MASAI.

There once lived an old man who had two daughters and a son.
 In course of time the children grew up, and the boy became a warrior.

War then broke out between the old man's people and a neighbouring tribe, with the result that the former feared to take their cattle to the salt-lick, as they were accustomed to do once or twice a month. The cattle suffered in consequence, and gave no milk.

When the old man's son saw that his cattle were falling ill, he made up his mind to take them to the salt-lick, and to die with them if necessary. His elder sister accompanied him, and as he was leaving the paternal roof, he told his younger sister that if she saw smoke issuing from the watering-place, she might know that he was safe.

On his arrival at the salt-lick he erected his kraal, and encircled it with a hedge of thorns. The next morning he took his cattle out to graze, leaving his sister to look after the kraal. For some days the enemy did not come near them, but one morning they suddenly appeared. The girl was alone at the time, and they made love to her, after which they departed.

On the warrior's return in the evening he noticed the footmarks, but said nothing to his sister. The next morning he drove his cattle out to graze as usual, and when he had taken them to a safe distance, he returned and hid himself near the kraal. The enemy came again and made love to the girl. When they were about to leave, the warrior heard his sister say to them: 'If you come this evening, I will sing when my brother milks the big cow. You can then take me away and the cattle too.'

The warrior went back to his cattle, and in the evening, when he had returned to the kraal, he placed his weapons in readiness, and pretended to milk the big cow. His sister at once commenced to sing, so he left the cow, and seized his weapons. Almost at the same time one of the enemy jumped over the thorn hedge only to be killed by the warrior. Five others met with the same fate, and the remainder fled. The warrior then sallied forth, and collected a lot of firewood with which he lit a fire and burnt the bodies.

It had been raining, and the women of the old man's kraal were repairing the damage done to their huts by plastering them with a mixture of cow-dung and clay. The warrior's younger sister was on the roof of the hut, and when she saw the smoke issuing from the salt-lick, she cried out: 'My brother is safe.' She was asked how she knew, and she told everybody what her brother had said to her when he left them.

The next morning all the people of the old man's kraal moved to the salt-lick, and their cattle speedily recovered. The warrior related what his sister had done, and her father sought out a man to marry her.

Before this event it was not customary for the young girls to go to the warriors' kraals, and they remained at home till they were married; but when the story of the girl's treachery was known, it was considered safer to let them go, and sing, and dance, and live with the warriors. And this custom has been observed ever since.

THE STORY OF THE DEVIL CALLED SAE-KIDONGOI¹ AND THE CHILDREN.

There was once upon a time an old man who had two wives. One of his wives gave birth to a son and a daughter, and then died, leaving her little children to be looked after by their step-mother. But both their step-mother and their father disliked them and treated them badly.

One day the inhabitants of the kraal moved with their cattle to another grazing ground. The two children, however, remained behind in the deserted huts to see if they could pick up any food which might have been left there. They stayed all night, and started off the next morning to follow the cattle trail. But on the road they crossed another trail, that of the devil called Sae-Kidongoi, and they followed this one by mistake, arriving eventually at the devil's kraal. He was out at the time herding his cattle, so the children set to work to sweep out his hut, and then drank his milk.

In the evening when the cattle returned to the kraal, the children hid themselves in the devil's bed, i. e. they covered themselves with the grass which had been thrown in the corner of the hut. When the devil arrived, and saw that the place had been swept clean, and his milk drunk, he wept, and said, 'Ah! Have the spirits of my mother's hut visited me? I will hang myself to-morrow morning.'

The children remained silent in the bed while the devil was talking; but when he went to milk his cows, the boy got up and said: 'I must go and get some milk.' His sister tried to dissuade him, and reminded him that if the devil saw him he would eat them both. He went, nevertheless, and when the devil left his cows for a few minutes, the boy seized a gourd, and brought it into the hut, where he emptied it with his sister, after which he put it back in the place where he had found it. On the devil's return, he said: 'Ah! Have the spirits of my mother's hut come to drink my milk? I will hang myself to-morrow morning.'

Having put the calves in their shed, the devil entered the hut, and lit a fire at the entrance. His tail was so long that he was unable to put it in the hut, so he left it outside, and fanned the fire with it, and blew the sparks into a flame with his back. When the boy saw what the devil was doing, he laughed, and the devil said: 'Ah! the spirits of my mother's hut are laughing at me.'

The next morning, the devil fastened a cord round his neck, and hanged himself. When he was dead, the boy cut off the long tail, and took it away with him. The children then started off to retrace their steps of the day before, driving the devil's cattle before them.

They had not gone far before they met a number of hyenas who asked the boy whose caravan he was travelling with. On hearing that it was Sae-Kidongoi's, they were much alarmed, and asked whether the devil would overtake them if they were to run away. The boy told them that if they were to run for four days they would escape, but to show that the devil was not far off, he pointed to some dust which was rising up behind the cattle, and told them that that was Sae-Kidongoi's tail. The hyenas at once fled, and the children pursued their way without further molestation.

When they stopped for the night, they were visited by some lions, who asked them whom the cattle belonged to. The boy answered: 'They belong to nobody, you had better eat them; but if you do, you will never boast again.'

The lions were surprised at this reply, and said: 'Why should we never boast again? Is there anything that we fear except Sae-Kidongoi?'

The boy then asked them: 'Don't you believe these cattle are Sae-Kidongoi's?'

The lions were incredulous, and told him to show them the devil. The boy replied: 'He is asleep.' But he went to where a calf was lying, and tied one end of the devil's tail to it. The tail was so long that when one stood at the other end it was impossible to see that it had been fastened to the calf. The boy then returned to the lions and called them. One of them went with him, but when he saw Sae-Kidongoi's tail he fled and the others followed him.

The next morning the boy followed the cattle trail until he reached his father's kraal. He made his own kraal, and then went and killed his father and step-mother, after which he combined and kept the two herds.

Both he and his sister became adults, when certain ceremonies were performed. They then married and lived happily ever afterwards.

THE STORY OF THE WARRIORS AND THE MONKEYS.

Some warriors once wished to go and raid, so they consulted a medicine-man before starting, and were told that if they killed any monkeys on the road, the expedition would prove a failure.

One of the warriors was a coward, and when he heard what had been predicted, he made up his mind if a chance presented itself to kill a monkey.

On the road the warriors saw two monkeys and called one another's attention to them. The coward also saw them, and stayed behind on the pretext of having broken his sandal. He waited until his companions had passed on, and then killed one of the monkeys which being ill was unable to run away. He afterwards rejoined the other warriors, and they continued their journey.

In the meantime the monkey which had escaped returned to its dead comrade and lamented its loss. 'O! my brother,' it said, 'I tried to persuade you to run away, and you said you were not able. Then the cursed one came and killed you. O! my brother.'

When the warriors reached the country they intended to attack, they saw one of the inhabitants sitting under a stone trapping rock-rabbits. They crept up to him and threw a club at him. Although the club hit its mark, the man only complained of the flies that bit him. Another club was thrown with a like result. The man then turned round, and seeing the warriors, sprang at them, and although unarmed put them to flight.

The warriors at once knew that the coward had killed the monkey contrary to the medicine-man's advice, and they put him to death on the spot.

 And-they-take their-mother the-kraal of-their-father.

THE STORY OF KONYEK AND HIS FATHER².

A big dance was once held at which many warriors and maidens were present. Towards evening the dancers dispersed, and each warrior selected one or more of the girls to accompany him home.

¹ And I will cry when I look to see if the enemies are coming.

² The origin of this tale is doubtful. It is well known throughout Masailand,

One of the men, a particularly handsome and well-built fellow, went away with three sisters. On leaving, he asked the girls where they would like to go, and they told him they wished to accompany him to his kraal. He said that it was a long way off, but they replied that that did not matter.

They started off, and after walking some distance they approached the kraal. The girls noticed some white things scattered about on the ground, and asked the warrior what they were. He said that they were his sheep and goats; but when they reached their destination, they saw that they were human bones. They entered the warrior's hut, and the girls were surprised to find that he lived quite alone.

It transpired later that this warrior was in reality a devil who ate people; but it was not known, as he concealed his tail under his garment. He had even eaten his mother, and had thrown her bones into the heap of grass which formed the bed.

Shortly after their arrival at the hut, the warrior went outside, leaving the girls alone. A voice, which came from the bed, startled them by asking them who had brought them there. They replied that the warrior had brought them, whereupon the voice told them to open the mattress. The girls threw off the top layer of grass exposing the bones to view. The voice, which came from the bones, then related that she had been the warrior's mother, and that he had become a demon, and eaten her. The girls asked the bones what they should do, and the voice spoke as follows: 'The warrior will come presently and bring you a sheep. Accept it. He will then go outside again, and, having shut the door, sit down there. Make a hole in the wall and pass out. If you are asked what the knocking is, say that you are killing the sheep.'

Everything took place as the voice had predicted, and the girls and is probably of ancient date; but as the nudity on the part of the men is notorious, it would be impossible for a Masai warrior to hide his tail, if he had one, under his cloth or skin.

Amongst the Nilotic tribes it is a common practice for women to wear a tail of strings behind (Baker, The Albert Nyanza, vol. i, pp. 90, 244, &c., and Johnston, The Uganda Protectorate, p. 782, &c.), and amongst the peoples visited by Schweinfurth, and described in The Heart of Africa (vol. i, pp. 77, 136, &c.), we find that the Dyoor men wore tails of calf skin, and the Bongo 'tails, like black horses' tails, composed of the bast of the Sanseviera.' The Bongo men and their neighbours, the Mittoo, the Nyam-Nyam, and the Kredy, 'also wear an apron of some sort of skin.' These people are, or were, cannibals. (Schweinfurth, Junker, and Journal of the African Society, No. xi, April, 1904.)

made a hole in the wall of the hut through which they passed and escaped. When they reached the road, however, one of them suddenly remembered that she had left her beads behind. Her sisters told her to go and fetch them while they waited for her. She returned to the hut, but met the warrior, who asked her if he should eat her or make her his wife. She thanked him for giving her the choice, and said she preferred the latter.

They lived together for a considerable period, and after a time the woman presented the demon with a son whom they named Konyek. From the day of his birth Konyek accompanied his father on his journeys to the forest in quest of people to devour; and while the man and the boy ate human beings, they took home with them for the woman goats and sheep to eat and cows to milk.

One day one of the woman's sisters came to the kraal to visit her. As Konyek and his father were both absent when she arrived, the two women sat and talked until it was time for the visitor to depart. The weather looked threatening as she rose to take her leave, and Konyek's mother cried out to her not to go to the tree in the middle of the plain, should it rain, for it was her husband's and son's custom to rest there on their way home. But the woman hurried away without paying attention to her sister's warning, and when it came on to rain a little later, she ran to the tree in question, which was a baobab, and climbed up into it. She had not been there long before Konyek and his father arrived upon the scene, and stood underneath the tree to get shelter from the rain. Their appearance recalled to the woman her sister's words, and she was greatly alarmed.

Konyek gazed up into the tree, and remarked that there was something peculiar about it, but his father said it was only because it was raining hard. Shortly afterwards, however, Konyek saw the woman, and called out: 'There is my meat.' The woman was forced to descend, and she gave birth to twins. Konyek picked up the children, and said: 'I will take these kidneys to mother to roast for me.'

When it stopped raining the two returned home, and Konyek asked his mother to roast his kidneys for him. But the woman knew at once that her sister had been put to death, and she hid the children in a hole in the earth, roasting instead two rats. When they were ready, Konyek went to the fire, picked them up off the stones, and ate them, grumbling at the same time because they were so small. His mother pretended to be very annoyed at this, and turning to her husband, complained of what their son had said. The old man told her not to mind the boy as he was a liar.

The woman fed and tended the children, who were both boys, and gradually they grew. One day she asked her husband to bring her an ox, which, she said, she wished to slaughter and eat. Konyek on hearing this request at once pricked up his ears, and remarked: 'It really amuses me to hear of a woman who wants to eat an ox all by herself. I think those kidneys of mine have something to do with this matter.' However, the two men searched for an ox which they procured and brought back with them. They slaughtered the animal, and left the meat with the woman, after which they went for a walk in the forest.

As soon as they had departed, the woman let the children come out of their hole and gave them the ox to eat. They ate till sunset, when she sent them back again to their hiding-place.

Konyek and his father returned shortly afterwards, and the former being very sharp at once noticed the small footmarks on the ground. 'I wonder,' he said, 'what those small and numerous footmarks are. They are certainly not mine.' His mother, however, stoutly insisted on the marks having been made by herself or by the two men, and in this she received her husband's support. Being annoyed with Konyek on account of the way he treated his mother, the old man killed him and ate him. But he immediately came to life again, and cried out: 'There, I have come back again.'

As time passed on the children grew up, and their aunt asked them one day if they knew that the people who lived in the same kraal with them were in reality demons and cannibals. She also inquired if, in the event of her being able to obtain weapons from her husband, they could put Konyek and his father to death. The boys replied that they could, but asked the woman what she would say if her husband wanted to know why she required the weapons. She told them that she would say she wanted them to protect herself against any enemies who might come.

When Konyek and his father next returned home, the woman asked her husband if he would procure two spears, two shields, and two swords for her, 'for,' she said, 'I am always here alone, and if any enemies come, I wish to be able to fight with them.' Konyek remarked that he had never before heard of a woman who wanted men's weapons, and said he thought that those kidneys which he had brought his mother to roast for him must have something to do with this request. Notwithstanding Konyek's protest the old man obtained for his wife the weapons she required. When he had given them to her, she fetched an ox-hide, and asked the two men to lie down on the ground while she stretched the hide over them and pegged it down. She told them that when she was ready she would cry out and see if the enemy came, in which case they could assist her. She pegged the ox-hide down securely, and asked them if they could get out. Konyek found a hole and began to crawl out, but his mother told him to get in again, and she pegged it down once more. She then raised her voice, and called to the children, who came from their hiding-place, and killed Konyek and his father.

As Konyek was dying, he said to his parent: 'Did I not tell you so, and you said I lied?'

The boys, after killing the two devils, took their aunt away to their father's kraal.

THE STORY OF THE OLD MAN AND HIS KNEE.

There was once an old man who was unmarried and lived alone in his hut.

One night he went to sleep, and when he awoke in the morning, he found his knee was greatly swollen. There was nobody to attend to him, so he kept quiet as he thought he only had a boil. After remaining thus for six months, he asked himself how it was the boil did not come to a head so as to enable him to lance it. He waited two months more, and as it had not come to a head, he said to himself: 'Even if it kills me, I will lance it.' He therefore took his knife, and lanced it; and out came two children.

He looked after the children and fed them, and when they were old enough, he told them to sit by the door of the cave, while he went to look for food, and not to open to people they did not know.

On his return he sang :

'It is now soft, but not yet burst,
My children of the knee¹.
Go, my little one, let me in,
Open the door to me.'

The children opened the door to him, and he entered, and gave them their food.

One day some of the old man's enemies came to the cave, and said to the children: 'Open the door, children.' But as the children refused, they decided to wait until the sun should set to see if the owner arrived.

The old man returned in the evening, and sang the usual song, whereupon the door was opened.

The enemies then elected to sleep where they were, and to go the next evening to sing the same song, and to kidnap the children. So the next evening they went to the cave and sang:

'It is now soft, but not yet burst,
My children of the knee.
Go, my little one, let me in,
Open the door to me.'

As the voice, however, did not resemble their father's, the children refused to open the door.

The men then returned to their own country and consulted a medicine-man. They told him they wanted to make their voices resemble an old man's in order that they could kidnap some children they had seen in the forest.

The medicine-man told them to go back to where the children were, and to eat nothing on the road.

But before they reached the cave, they had eaten a lizard and an ant¹ which they found, thinking that these small things would not matter. On their arrival they sang the song, but the children did not recognize their father's voice, and refused to open the door. The enemies then returned to the medicine-man's kraal, and, on being asked what they had eaten on the road, replied: 'A lizard and an ant.'

They were told to go again to the cave, and to pick up nothing whatever on the way, not even a small ant.

They did as they were told, and when they reached the cave they sang the song. The children, thinking it was their father, opened the door, whereupon the men entered and carried them off to their kraal.

In the evening the old man returned to the cave, and sang, but as he received no answer, he looked for the children. When he did not find them, he wept, and started off to search in the neighbouring kraals.

He arrived at one kraal and sang, but received no reply. He then went on to the next one, and sang again, and the children recognized his voice, and wept. When their father heard them, he went outside, and shouted loudly. The people told him to stop, and said a spell had been put on the town, and that no stranger might enter without eating a certain medicine. They then put a stone in the fire, and when it was hot, told the old man to open his mouth and swallow the medicine. The old man opened his mouth, and the stone was thrown in, and killed him. After this the children of the knee remained in the kraal.

THE STORY OF THE GREED OF THE OLD MAN AND HIS WIFE.

There was once upon a time an old man who lived in a kraal with his neighbours. And this old man had a wife and a small child, and he possessed a very fine ox.

One day he said to himself : ' How shall I slaughter my ox ?' and he said aloud to his wife : ' My child ! I will call the men and tell them that I am going to move. We can then slaughter our ox all by ourselves.'

His wife agreed, and in the evening the old man blew his horn as a signal to his friends that he had something to tell them. His neighbours collected together, and he told them that he wished to move as the air did not agree with him. The others consented, and in the morning he saddled his donkeys, separated his cattle from the rest, and started off, accompanied by his wife, who was carrying the child.

When they had gone some distance, they halted and erected their kraal, after which they rested.

At dawn the next day the old man called his wife, and asked her why they had not yet slaughtered their ox. The woman replied: 'My husband! How shall we manage to slaughter the ox? There are two things to be considered, the first is that we have no herdsman, and the second, that I am carrying the baby.' The old man then said: 'Oh, I know what we will do. I will stab the ox in the neck, then I will leave you to skin it, and I will carry the child to the grazing ground. But when you have skinned the animal, roast some meat so that it will be ready on my return.'

The old man then killed the ox, after which he picked up his bow and quiver, put the child on his back, and drove the cattle to the grazing ground, where he herded them.

In the afternoon, as the child was asleep, the old man put it down in the grass, and went to drive back the cattle, for they had wandered far. But when he returned to the spot where he had left the child, he was unable to find it, so he decided to set light to the grass, 'for,' he thought, 'when the fire reaches the child, it will cry, and I will run to the place and pick it up before it is burnt.' He made a fire with his fire-sticks, and the fire travelled to where the child was. He ran to the spot, but when he reached it, he found that the child was dead.

The old man had left his wife in the morning skinning the ox. And while she was skinning it—she had just reached the dewlap—the knife slipped, and she stabbed herself in the eye. She went and lay down, and the birds came and finished the meat.

After the child was burnt, the old man drove the cattle to the kraal, and when they were opposite to the gate, he heard his wife weeping, and saying: 'Oh, my eye!' He therefore asked her who had told her the news.

'What news?' she inquired.

'The child has been burnt,' he replied.

The woman exclaimed: 'Oh, my child!'

The old man then asked where his meat was, and his wife informed him that the birds had eaten it, whereupon he cried out: 'Oh, my meat!'

They both wept, the old man crying : 'Oh, my meat!' and the woman : 'Oh, my child! Oh, my eye!'

Look well at these people. It was for their greed that they were punished; they lost their child and their ox, the woman lost her eye, and they had to return in shame to their former home.

THE STORY OF THE WOMAN AND THE CHILDREN OF THE SYCAMORE TREE.

There was once a woman who had no husband, and she lived for many days in trouble. One day she said to herself: ‘Why do I always feel so troubled? It is because I have neither children nor husband. I will go to the medicine-man and get some children.’

She went to the medicine-man and told him she was unhappy owing to the fact that although she had now grown old she had neither husband nor children. The medicine-man asked her which she wanted, husband or children; and she told him she wanted children.

¹ And she is unable to again descend from the tree.

She was instructed to take some cooking-pots—three or as many as she could carry—and to search for a fruit-bearing sycamore, to fill the pots with the fruit, to put them in her hut, and to go for a walk.

The woman followed out these instructions implicitly. She gathered the fruit, filled the pots, placed them in her hut, and went for a walk till the evening.

On arriving near the kraal, she heard the sound of voices and asked herself: 'Why does one hear the voices of children in the kraal?' She approached nearer, and found her hut filled with children, all her work finished, the boys herding the cattle, the hut swept clean by the girls, the warriors singing and dancing on the common, and the little children waiting to greet her. She thus became a rich woman, and lived happily with her children for many days.

One day, however, she scolded the children, and reproached them with being children of the tree. They remained silent and did not speak to her; then, when she went to see her friends in the other kraals, they returned to the sycamore tree, and became fruit again. On her return to her own kraal, the woman wept bitterly when she found it empty, and paid another visit to the medicine-man, whom she taxed with having spirited away her children.

The medicine-man told her that he did not know what she should do now, and when she proposed to go and look at the sycamore tree, he recommended her to try.

She took her cooking-pots to the tree and climbed up into it. But when she reached the fruit they all put forth eyes and stared at her. This so startled her that she was unable to descend, and her friends had to come and help her down.

She did not go to the tree again to search for children.

THE STORY OF THE FATHER OF MAROGO.

There was once upon a time an old man called 'The Father of Marogo' who was a great glutton. He had only one daughter, Marogo, but he disliked the child very much as he had to provide food for her.

After a while his wife gave birth to a second child, and about the same time Marogo was married, and moved to her husband's kraal. The old man then lived alone with his wife and baby.

One day Marogo sent a messenger to invite her parents to come on the morrow to her husband's kraal as they intended to slaughter a bullock. When the messenger arrived, Marogo's father was away from home attending to his cattle, so the message was delivered to his wife, who replied that they accepted.

The cattle returned in the evening, and the woman said to her husband: 'Father of Marogo, Marogo has sent us a message.'

He replied, 'What did the hag say?'

The woman rebuked him for calling their daughter names, and told him that their son-in-law was going to slaughter a bullock the next day, and that Marogo had bidden them to the feast.

Marogo's father was delighted, and cried out: 'Ah! my dear Marogo. Anybody could see that she is my daughter.'

The next morning they started for their son-in-law's kraal, and on the road came to a big river. The woman, who had been carrying the baby, called out to her husband to help her. The old man told her to bring him the child and he would take it across; at the same time he gave his wife his clay pot, which he had exchanged for a goat, and instructed her not to let the water sweep it away.

He then entered the river, but before he reached the middle, he let go the child and the current carried it away. The woman burst into tears, but her husband told her to be quiet as the child would be picked up lower down the stream. He called out to some imaginary people, and when the sound ceased echoing among the trees, he said: 'Seize this child.' The echo came back to them, and he asked his wife if she heard the reply, after which he proposed that they should go on.

As they were leaving the bank, the woman asked him where the men were who had picked up the child. Marogo's father replied: 'You women are such fools! Even if this child is lost, won't you bear another?'

They continued their journey, and when they arrived near Marogo's kraal, the old man saw the people slaughtering the bullock. As his wife was some way behind, he beckoned to her with his club in order to point out to her that the feast had commenced. He thought he was only beckoning to her, but as his wife came up to him, he hit her on the head with the club, and made the blood gush forth.

He was sorry for what he had done, and picked up some earth which he plastered on the wound. He told his wife not to let the people they were visiting know that he had hit her; 'and,' he added, 'if you are offered plenty of meat, don't refuse. Put it on one side, and give it to me afterwards, for I shall not get enough to eat. Now that you have no child, you can take home whatever you don't eat.'

They stayed in their daughter's kraal until it was time to return, and the woman took away some of the meat that was left over for her husband to eat at home.

THE STORY OF THE TWO WIVES AND THE TWINS.

There was once upon a time a man who had two wives. By one wife he had no family, but by the other he had several children.

The latter on one occasion gave birth to twins, and great was her joy when she heard that both the children were boys. The barren woman, however, was so jealous that she made up her mind to do something that would turn her husband's love for the happy mother to hatred. She took the babies while their mother was sleeping, and cut their fingers, after which she rubbed some of the blood on their mother's mouth. She then put the children into a drum, which she threw into the river, and called to the other inhabitants of the kraal to come and look at the woman who had eaten her offspring. The men came, and, seeing the blood, believed the story, especially as the children were nowhere to be found. The old man was at first uncertain what to do with the supposed murderess; but after a while he called her to him and told her that as a punishment she should herd donkeys for the rest of her days.

The drum in which the woman had put the children was carried along by the current to another country, and some old men who were sitting on the bank of the river outside their kraal saw it as it was floating down the stream. The one who saw it first claimed it as his, whilst one of the others claimed the contents, whatever they might be. The drum was fished out of the water, and when it was opened the two babies were brought to light. The old man who had claimed the contents of the drum took the children to his hut, and fed them, and brought them up as his own sons.

In course of time the boys grew up, were circumcised, and became warriors. They had received the nickname 'Sons-of-the-drum' from their playmates and fellow warriors, and as they did not understand the meaning, they asked the older people why it had been given them. On hearing the story of their being found in a drum in the river, they decided to pay a visit to the country of their birth ; and so as not to arrive empty-handed, they thought it would be well to first of all undertake a raid, and capture some cattle. They shortly afterwards started off on a raiding expedition, and succeeded in lifting a herd of cattle. They then passed through a forest, arriving eventually in another country where signs of habitation soon became evident. They had not proceeded far before they came upon a woman herding donkeys outside a kraal. That a woman should undertake so menial a task surprised them to such an extent that they went up to her and accosted her. 'How is it,' they asked, 'that you are herding the donkeys? Is this not the children's work?'

The woman replied: 'It is painful to me to explain to you, my children, why I do this work.' She, however, proceeded to tell them the pathetic story of her life. She related how her husband had had two wives, and whilst the other one was barren, she herself gave birth to several children. She spoke of her twins, and described how the other woman had come to her while she was asleep, cut her babies' fingers, and smeared the blood on her mouth. She went on to say that the children were put into a drum by the other wife, and thrown into the river ; and she dwelt on the punishment to which she had been sentenced.

The warriors on hearing this account said to the woman: 'We are your children, look at our fingers,' and they related to her the story which had been told them of their being found in the drum.

The woman at once recognized her sons, and, at their request, left the donkeys and milked their cows. The donkeys went back to the kraal by themselves in the evening, and the people asked one another where 'the donkey-woman' was, this being the name which had been given to the herdswooman.

On the morrow she was seen dressed in new clothes, and the inhabitants of the kraal asked if 'the donkey-woman' had found the sons she had eaten. When her husband saw her, he wished to beat her ; but he was deterred by the two warriors, who requested him to call a meeting of the men of the kraals so that they might talk with them.

The men came, and it was found that the warriors were the old man's sons.

The old man then wished to kill his barren wife, but his sons told him to give her the same work to do which he had formerly given to their mother. This he did, and the guilty woman was sentenced to herd donkeys for the rest of her life.

THE STORY OF THE CATERPILLAR AND THE WILD ANIMALS.

Once upon a time a caterpillar entered a hare's house when the owner was absent. On his return the hare noticed the marks on the ground, and cried out: 'Who is in my house?' The caterpillar replied in a loud voice: 'I am the warrior-son of the long one, whose anklets have become unfastened in the fight in the Kurtiale country. I crush the rhinoceros to the earth, and make cow's dung of the elephant! I am invincible!'

The hare went away saying: 'What can a small animal like myself do with a person who tramples an elephant under foot like cow's dung?' On the road he met the jackal, and asked him to return with him and talk with the big man who had taken possession of his house. The jackal agreed, and when they reached the place, he barked loudly, and said: 'Who is in the house of my friend the hare?'

The caterpillar replied: 'I am the warrior-son of the long one, whose anklets have become unfastened in the fight in the Kurtiale country. I crush the rhinoceros to the earth, and make cow's dung of the elephant! I am invincible!' On hearing this the jackal said: 'I can do nothing against such a man,' and left.

The hare then fetched the leopard, whom he begged to go and talk with the person in his house. The leopard, on reaching the spot, grunted out: 'Who is in the house of my friend the hare?' The caterpillar replied in the same manner as he had done to the jackal, and the leopard said: 'If he crushes the elephant and the rhinoceros, he will do the same to me.'

They went away again, and the hare sought out the rhinoceros. The latter, on arriving at the hare's house, asked who was inside, but when he heard the caterpillar's reply, he said: 'What, he can crush me to the earth! I had better go away then.'

The hare next tried the elephant, and asked him to come to his assistance, but on hearing what the caterpillar had to say, the elephant remarked that he had no wish to be trampled under foot like cow's dung, and departed.

A frog was passing at the time, and the hare asked him if he could make the man who had conquered all the animals leave his house. The frog went to the door and asked who was inside. He received the same reply as had been given to the others, but instead of leaving, he went nearer, and said: 'I, who am strong and a leaper, have come. My buttocks are like the post, and God has made me vile.'

When the caterpillar heard this, he trembled, and as he saw the frog coming nearer, he said: 'I am only the caterpillar.'

The animals who had collected near seized him, and dragged him out; and they all laughed at the trouble he had given.

THE STORY OF THE WARRIOR AND THE LUMBWA¹.

Once whilst the Masai warriors were slaughtering a bullock in the woods, their enemies, the Lumbwa, suddenly appeared at the kraal, and drove off the cattle that were grazing near at hand, killing at the same time the boy who was herding them.

A young girl, the sister of the owner of the cattle, on hearing the news, ran to the slaughter-house to call her brother. On her arrival she cried to the warriors: 'O ye who are feasting! The dust rises in the direction of Lumbwa; the black and white cow is on the point of giving birth; the small calves have blotches on the sides of their heads; the bulls' humps move to and fro; and the child's body lies by the wayside. Ye who are wearing your goat-skin aprons, and are ready for the fray, come!'

The warriors told her that her brother was not there, and advised her to go some distance further to a spot where others were also slaughtering. She started off again, and after a time found her brother, who treated the matter very lightly. On hearing what had occurred he called to his servant, Rindi, and told him to bring his sandals and spear.

Now this warrior was such a giant that his servant was unable to lift his weapons or sandals, and was obliged to roll them over and over until he reached the spot where his master was waiting. Some days elapsed after the theft of the cattle before the warrior was ready to start off in pursuit of the enemy, and then he was only accompanied by his servant.

After proceeding a short distance they arrived at a spot where the cow had cast its calf, and some way further on they reached a pond, near which some milk had been spilt. The warrior told his servant to taste this milk in order that he might know how far ahead of them the enemy was. Rindi tried the milk, and said it had been there two days. They continued their journey, and later on came to a lake where they found some more milk. Rindi tasted this too, and said it had been there since the preceding day.

The next morning they again saw some milk by the road, and this Rindi declared to have been spilt the night before.

On they went again, and during the course of the day came upon some more milk, which they found to be quite fresh. Rindi on tasting it asked the warrior if he could not see the Lumbwa as they could only be a short distance in front of them.

Shortly after this they came up with the enemy, and after a fight the warrior killed them all, and recovered his cattle, which he drove back to his kraal.

THE STORY OF THE BOY AND HIS BROTHER AND THEIR SONG.

There once lived an old man who had two wives, and by each wife he had a son. One of the wives died, and the old man told the other one to look after both children.

The boys loved one another very much, and always went together to herd their father's cattle. They had their own pet cow, which they called the Dapple-grey, and when they wanted to milk her they only had to sing the following song :

'Child of my father, brother dear,
She yields her milk, our Dapple-grey,
She yields it though no calf is near,
This song of mine she can't gainsay.

'Into my mouth I milk thee not',
Dear Dapple-grey, there's nought to fear,
No gourd or calabash I've got,
I only, whom thou lov'st, am here.'

After a time the woman took a great dislike to her step-son, and made up her mind to get rid of him so that her own son might have all the milk. She therefore dug a hole in the floor of the hut, and said to the boy: 'You whom God gave me, come from the grazing ground at midday, and have your head shaved.'

When the child arrived, his step-mother told him to go into the hut, and bring the bag containing her razor from under the bed. He entered the hut, and not seeing the hole which had been dug in the floor, fell into it. The woman immediately covered in the hole by dropping a big stone into it.

In the evening the other boy returned with the cattle to the kraal, and asked his mother where his brother was. The woman replied that she had shaved him a short while before, and that he had returned to the grazing ground. When she was told that he had not been seen, she wept and cried out: 'My child is lost.'

As nothing was heard of the boy that evening, it was assumed that he was dead. His brother was much distressed, and during the greater part of the next day whilst herding the cattle he wept and sang their every-day song.

¹ It is a common practice amongst Masai herdsmen to milk their cows direct into their mouths.

In the evening he drove the cattle back to the kraal, singing as he went, and when he was outside his mother's hut, he heard his brother singing as well. He listened, and went to the door of the hut, where he sang again. His brother replied, and he heard the voice distinctly. He entered the hut, took away the stone, and rescued the boy.

The mother was looking after the calves at the time, and letting them go to the cows one at a time to be fed. On her return to the hut she was greatly surprised to see her step-son, and asked where the child came from. Her son answered: 'He has come from the forest.'

The next morning the boy sharpened a sword, and when his mother left her hut, he cut her throat. His half-brother, who had been put in the pit for nothing, was thus avenged, whilst the woman paid for her sin with her life.

THE STORY OF THE OSTRICH CHICKS¹.

There was once upon a time an ostrich, which, having laid some eggs, hatched them, and reared the chicks.

One day a lion came, and took the chicks away, and hid them. The mother bird followed the thief, and demanded her young ones ; but the lion refused to give them up, and drove her away. She appealed to the counsellors, but they were afraid of the lion, and decided that the chicks were his. The ostrich then went to call a meeting of all the animals. When she arrived at the place where the mongoose lived, he told her to go and dig a hole under an ant-hill with two exits. This she did, and then collected all the animals at this spot. Like the counsellors, however, they feared the lion, and said the chicks were his. When it came to the mongoose's turn to be asked, he cried out: 'We have never seen hairs beget feathers. Think what you are saying. The chicks are the ostrich's.' And having said that, he jumped down the hole under the ant-hill, and escaped at the other end. The lion jumped after him, and not knowing of the second exit, waited for him to come out of the hole by which he had entered. As time wore on, the lion became hungry, but he still kept watch, for he thought that if he went to search for food the mongoose would get away. At length he died, and the ostrich recovered her chicks.

THE STORY OF THE CROW WHO MARRIED A WOMAN.

There was once upon a time a crow who made love to a woman. When he had given the woman's father the customary present, viz. three heifers and two young bulls, and brewed some honey-wine, he was allowed to marry her. He took his wife away with him, and went to live in a wood.

At the end of a year the woman asked the crow where his kraal was, but he refused to tell her, nor would he vouchsafe a reply when she asked him, as she did daily, when they were going to his home.

One day the crow told her to climb up a tree, and to wait for him there while he went to cut some firewood for her. She did as she was bid, and when she reached the top, she sang and wept.

Just at this time the woman's former lover, who with her brothers was returning from a raid, passed near the tree. The lover recognized the singing, and told his friends that he heard their sister's voice. They laughed at him, and said they supposed the loss of their sister had turned his head. However, when they listened, they admitted that it was their sister's voice that they heard, and they started off to search for her. They found her in the tree, and asked her who had put her there. She replied that she had been sold to the crow who was at that moment collecting firewood. They told her not to come down when the crow returned, and then went away and hid.

Shortly afterwards the crow came back with the firewood, and called out to his wife to descend. She refused, however, even though he threatened to fetch her down.

While the two were disputing, the woman's brothers and lover emerged from their hiding place, and fought with the crow, whom they succeeded in putting to death. They then escorted her back to their kraal.

THE STORY OF THE HARE AND THE HYENA AND THE LIONESS'S CAVE.

The hare once met the hyena, and proposed that they should go for a walk. They went for a walk together, and then separated, after which the hare went to the lioness's cave, and found it closed. She cried out: 'Stone, open,' and the stone rolled away from the mouth of the cave. She entered and said: 'Stone, close,' and the stone returned to its place. She then proceeded to the room where the lioness stored her fat, after which she went to the room where the meat was kept, and having had enough to eat, she returned to the entrance, told the stone to open, and when she had passed out, to close once more.

Feeling hungry again later she returned to the cave. On the road she met the hyena, who asked her where she came from, and why her mouth was oily. The hare denied that her mouth was oily, but as the hyena persisted in his statement, she told him to rub ashes on his mouth, and it would become as beautiful as hers. The hyena did as he was recommended, but no change took place in his appearance. The hare next suggested washing it with water, and afterwards with urine; but although the hyena tried both, his mouth remained as dry as before. The hyena then said: 'Please tell me where you go and feed.' At first the hare refused to comply with his request, and said: 'You are so foolish whenever you go anywhere, and are sure to be caught.' But as the hyena would take no refusal, she consented to allow him to accompany her, and told him about the lioness's cave. 'There are,' she said, 'five rooms. In the first the ashes are kept; in the next, the bones; in the third, the tough meat; in the fourth, the tender meat; and in the last, the fat.' The hyena cried: 'Get out of the way, take me there,' and off they started.

When they arrived at the cave, the hare told the hyena that when he wanted the cave to open he must say: 'Stone, open,' and when he wanted it to shut: 'Stone, close.' The hyena cried out: 'Stone, open,' and the stone rolled aside. When they were inside, the hare said: 'Stone, close,' and it closed again.

The hyena at once started on the ashes, while the hare went to the room where the fat was kept. When the latter had had enough to eat, she returned to the entrance, and said she was going away. The hyena remonstrated with her as he was not nearly satisfied. After telling him how to get out of the cave, the hare went up to the stone, and said: 'Stone, open,' and again, when she was outside: 'Stone, close.'

When the hyena was alone, he went to the place where the bones were kept, after which he proceeded to the next room, where the tough meat was stored, and ate until he was satisfied. He then returned to the entrance, and said to the stone: 'Stone, close,' instead of 'Stone, open.' He repeated the words 'Stone, close,' several times, and could not understand why nothing happened.

At this juncture the lioness, the owner of the cave, returned, and said: 'Stone, open.' When the hyena heard her, he cried: 'Ah!

woe is me! That is what I wanted to say. Poor fellow that I am! Stone, open! Stone, open!

The lioness entered, and said: 'Shall I eat you, or shall I make you my servant?'

The hyena asked to be made her servant, and was told to look after the lioness's cub. He was also given a bone, and instructed to break it when the lioness had crossed four rivers. The hyena counted the lioness's footsteps, and when he calculated that she had crossed the four rivers, broke the bone. A chip flew at the cub's head fracturing its skull. Fearing that the lioness would kill him on her return, he searched for some hornets, and stuffed one up each of the cub's nostrils so that it might be supposed that it had been stung to death.

The lioness returned to her cave a short while afterwards, and called to the hyena to bring her cub. The hyena prevaricated for some time, and invented several excuses for not doing as he was told; but the lioness was firm, and the hyena had to pick up the cub and bring it to its mother. The lioness at once saw that it was dead, and told the hyena to take it outside. While he was doing this, he ate one of the cub's legs.

A little later he was again ordered to bring the cub to its mother, and then to take it away once more. He devoured another leg while carrying it away, and when the lioness called out to him a third time to bring the cub to her, he said the birds had eaten two of its legs. He then ate up the cub.

The lioness intended to punish the hyena for his misdeeds, and after tying him to a tree, went to get some sticks with which to beat him. As he was standing there, bound to the tree, some other hyenas bent on a raiding expedition passed close by, and one of them seeing him, asked him why he had been tied up in this manner. He replied that he was being punished for having refused to drink some oil which had some flies in it. The other hyena suggested that they should exchange places, and after untying the knots, he allowed himself to be bound to the tree instead, while the first hyena followed in the wake of the raiding party.

After a time the lioness returned, and commenced to flog the hyena, who cried out: 'Stop, I will drink it now.'

'Drink what?' said the lioness, and she commenced to flog him again.

'Oh! oh!' the hyena cried, 'I will drink the oil with the flies in it.'

The lioness then saw that this was not the hyena that had killed her cub.

The next morning the hyenas on their way back from their raid passed the cave, and the one that had killed the cub saw on the ground some strips of bark, which the lioness had spread out in the sun to resemble meat. 'I will go to my master's kraal,' quoth he, 'for I see there has been a kill.' On reaching the spot, however, he was seized by the lioness, who bound him to the tree once more, and then beat him to death.

After this the lioness returned to her cave, and said: 'Stone, open.' When the stone had rolled aside, and she had entered, she said: 'Stone, close,' and it closed again.

THE STORY OF THE DEMON WHO ATE PEOPLE, AND THE CHILD².

There was once upon a time a demon who was greatly dreaded by the inhabitants of the country in which he lived owing to his principal food being human beings.

¹ So that I can go and return him.

² A Taveta Tale. The people of Taveta are nearly allied to the Masai,

On one occasion he devoured a large number of people and cattle—so many, in fact, that he thought he had exterminated the whole tribe. One woman, however, succeeded in hiding herself with her child in a pit, and after the demon had taken his departure she returned to the kraal and collected together all the food that had been left there.

The child was brought up in the pit, and when he was old enough to understand, his mother told him the story of the demon. For some time he did not venture away from the hiding-place, but after a while he made a bow and some arrows, and went for a walk. He shot a small bird, which he took back with him to the pit, and asked his mother if that was the demon. On being told that it was not, he went out again and shot another bird, and after that a Thomson's gazelle. He continued his search for a long time, and shot all kinds of things in the hope of killing the demon, but when he showed them to his mother, he found that he had not been successful.

The woman repeatedly urged her son not to leave the pit as they were the sole survivors of the tribe, but the boy was determined if possible to shoot the demon. One day he searched for a number of arrows and spears which he took to the top of a tree. He then climbed with his mother into the tree and lit a fire in the branches to attract the demon's attention. When the demon saw the smoke, he was greatly surprised, as he thought he had eaten all the inhabitants of the country. Having procured some axes, he went to the spot, and called out to the child and his mother to descend. As they refused to comply with his order, he commenced to cut down the tree. The boy shot him twice with his arrows, but the demon only thought he was being bitten by gadflies. As the arrows continued to hit him, however, he had to give up his intention of cutting down the tree, and shortly afterwards he lay down to die.

When he felt that his end was approaching, he said to the child: 'When I am dead, cut off my little finger, and your cattle will be restored to you. Then, cut off my thumb, and you will get back your people. After that cut open my face, and one man will come out.'

Having said this, he died, and the boy descended from the tree and many of them being actually descended from that race. An account of their history and customs, by the author, was published in the Journal of the African Society, No. 1, October, 1901.

cut off his fingers and thumb, from the stumps of which all the people and cattle that had been eaten emerged. The face was then cut open, and one man appeared.

The people returned with their cattle to their former kraals, and held a consultation at which it was decided to appoint the boy chief.

After some time had elapsed, the man who had been taken from the devil's face asked the chief to put him back again. The others argued with him, and told him that he was much better off now that he had been liberated, but their arguments availed nothing, and the chief, seeing that the man would take no refusal, asked to be given a month in which to consider the matter.

Knowing that the discontented man was very fond of tobacco, the chief planted some, and when it ripened, he went to watch it. As he expected, the man saw the tobacco, and picked a leaf. The chief called out to him to return it to the plant, but as the thief was unable to do this, he was taken to the kraal, where a meeting was held. Matters having been explained to those present, the thief was again called upon to replace the leaf. When he admitted his inability to do as he was required, the chief remarked that he too was unable to put him back in the demon's face.

Everybody appreciated the wisdom of the argument, and they all lived happily together ever afterwards, respecting their chief and loving one another.

ahead as he knew the way. They proceeded in this manner until near their destination, when the elder one held aside a tree which bent down on to the road, telling his brother at the same time to pass. The latter feared that the tree might slip and hit him in the eye; but as his brother assured him that he would not let it go, he passed. His fears were, however, not groundless, for his brother let the tree swing back as he approached; it caught him in the face, and put out his eye. He said nothing, but he thought to himself: 'I know the reason why my brother has put out my eye. It is on account of the buffaloes which I shot; and because of them he does not wish me to shoot again. But there is One who will avenge me.'

They reached the place where the buffaloes were, and the elder Dorobo said to his brother: 'Since you can no longer see, go and drive the buffaloes here for me to shoot.'

The younger one did as he was told, and drove the herd to where his brother lay hid. The latter shot at them as they passed, but missed them. The younger one then expressed a wish to have the buffaloes driven for him in order to see if he could still shoot. At this proposal the elder one laughed, and said: 'How can you with your one eye expect to hit them when I, who have both eyes, miss?' Nevertheless he went and drove the herd towards his one-eyed brother who succeeded in shooting four.

The elder Dorobo was so annoyed at this that he decided to kill his brother, and to carry off all the meat for his own children. He thought the best plan would be for his brother to sleep alone, when he could visit him during the night and shoot him. So after they had skinned the animals, he said: 'Since there is such a great quantity of meat, we had better divide it up now, and then each build his own hut; otherwise we might quarrel over it to-morrow.'

They divided the meat into equal shares; each hunter built his own hut; and they went to lie down. But the younger one was mistrustful of his brother, and suspected foul play. Instead therefore of going to sleep, he took one of the buffalo legs, wrapped his garment round it, and laid it on the grass which he had cut for a bed, while he went to lie down on the bare ground.

In the middle of the night the elder Dorobo came stealthily into the hut, and seeing the leg in the bed, thought it was his brother. He sat down, took careful aim, let fly his arrow, and shot the leg.

The younger hunter had been watching him all the time, and thought to himself: 'If my brother shoots at the leg, I shall know that he really intends to kill me.' As soon as he saw the arrow leave his brother's bow, and hit the leg, he shot his brother, and killed him.

He then picked up all the meat and took it home.

THE STORY OF THE DOROBO AND THE GIRAFFE.

A Dorobo once went a-hunting, and saw a giraffe eating a small acacia tree. Other people had been unsuccessful in their attempts to kill this giraffe on former occasions, so the hunter thought it would be wise to have some one to help him. He therefore fetched a friend ; but when he returned to the spot where he had left the giraffe, he found the animal had gone to the water to drink. The two men then thought out a plan of attack. It was agreed that the one who had first seen the animal should climb into a big acacia tree, and when it returned from the stream, jump on its back, and stab it in the neck. The other one was to hide himself near at hand in order to render any assistance that might be required.

The first Dorobo took his friend's knife, and climbed into the acacia. He remained there till midday, when the giraffe went to stand in the shade of the tree. As soon as it was near enough to him, the hunter jumped on its back, and clung to its neck, shouting at the same time to his friend, whom he called Le-pambito, to shoot the animal, and not to let it pass. The giraffe, much alarmed, dashed off at full speed, and Le-pambito was so amused at the sight of the animal with a man on its back that he roared with laughter. In fact he laughed so much that he fell down in a fit.

The giraffe continued its onward course, and the Dorobo in his excitement forgot that he had a knife in his belt until they had gone a considerable distance. When he remembered it, he unsheathed it, and stabbed the animal in the nape of the neck, thereby killing it.

He quickly skinned a portion of the beast, and took out the fat of the kidneys, with which he returned to look for his companion. He eventually found Le-pambito, and was surprised to see that he was dead, as he thought. He made a fire, roasted some of the fat, and put it near his friend's nostrils, in order to try and bring him back to life again. It had the desired effect, for Le-pambito came to himself, and cried out: 'Do not finish it alone.'

The two went to skin the dead giraffe, and when they had finished, they roasted a little of the meat, which they ate. The one who killed the giraffe then said to his friend: 'I shall not let you have any of this meat for you did not help me to kill it.' On hearing this, Le-pambito returned to the kraal.

When he arrived there, he met his companion's wife, who asked him if he had seen her husband. He replied: 'No, but I hear that he has killed a giraffe. I also hear,' he added, 'that he is very angry with you, and when he returns, he is going to beat you.'

The woman, thinking doubtless that it would be more prudent to go and stop with her friends until her husband's anger was appeased, left her hut. As soon as Le-pambito saw her depart, he entered the hut and waited for the other one to bring home his meat.

In the morning the Dorobo who had killed the giraffe arrived at the kraal with his first load of meat, which he passed into his hut through a hole in the wall at the back. To make sure that his wife was in the hut he called out to her, and Le-pambito replied, altering his voice to resemble a woman's. Satisfied that his meat was in safe hands, the Dorobo went back to the place where he had killed the giraffe, to fetch another load; and while he was absent his late companion carried off the meat to his own hut, after which he returned to wait for the rest. When several loads of meat had been thus brought to the hut, and afterwards taken by Le-pambito, and deposited in his own hut, the latter went to the woman whom he had frightened away by telling her that her husband was going to beat her, and told her that she might now go home as her husband was no longer angry with her.

She returned to her hut, and shortly afterwards her spouse came back to the kraal with the last load of meat. He called out to his wife to bring him a stool, that he might rest himself, and to fetch the snuff. After he had refreshed himself by taking some snuff, he told the woman to go and call his neighbours.

When they had arrived, the Dorobo inquired if the meat was ready. His wife was much perplexed at this request, and asked him what meat he alluded to. He replied: 'Why, all the meat—the whole giraffe—which I have brought here.' The woman, to his astonishment, said that she had not seen it.

Much exasperated he rose from his seat and flogged her, after which she told him between her tears what Le-pambito had done.

The Dorobo then realized that he had lost his whole giraffe owing to his selfishness.

 They-separate-not the-buttocks and the-ground.

The buttocks and the ground do not remain long apart.

[One explanation of this proverb is that a man must sit down, and though he may walk about or lie down, he will sit on the ground again later. Another theory is that it has in some way reference to the disposal of the dead. With the exception, however, of the medicine-men and rich people, who are buried in shallow trenches, burial is unknown amongst the Masai. But it is perhaps a remarkable coincidence that the Tavetans¹, who are closely allied to the Masai, and the Bari, Dinka, and Madi², who live nearly 1,000 miles away, and not very far from the country whence the ancestors of the Masai are believed to have hailed, bury their dead in a sitting posture.]

 The-euphorbia-tree.

What do my warriors resemble when they stand on one leg?
The euphorbia tree.

[Masai men often stand on one foot and rest the other against the knee¹. When in this position they are supposed to resemble the Candelabra euphorbia, which Sir H. Johnston² has described as being 'like a gigantic cabbage or cauliflower that has run to stalk, only to countless stalks, many-jointed, and of gouty thickness.']

	The-woman	who-is-chewing	the-gum.

Why does your mother use abusive language when she goes outside her hut? Because she is a woman eating gum.

[Masai women are fond of chewing a gummy substance which exudes from certain trees. This makes their teeth stick together, and their jaws crack when they attempt to speak. If a person accosts them, and hears this noise, he may think the women are reviling him.]

A road which leads to the water.

[The poisoned heads of arrows are wrapped up in a strip of hide to keep the poison fresh. This strip is narrow and long, and it is wetted at one end with saliva to make it adhere.

There is some play on the word kutuk, which refers to the point of the arrow, the end of the strip of hide, and the mouth.]

PART IV

'OROT OO-'L-MAASAE

DIVISIONS OF THE MASAI PEOPLE

The Masai race is divided into two sections, the one entirely pastoral and the other partially agricultural. The pastoral Masai call themselves Il-Maasae, whilst their brethren are known as 'L-Oikop or Il-Lumbwa.

The Masai are further divided genealogically into clans and families, and geographically into districts and sub-districts, as shown in the following tables:

Clans.	Families ¹ .
'L-Aiser.	'N-Gidoñgi (the medicine-man's horns), Il-Parkeneti (the counters ?), Il-Lughumae, Il-partimaro.
Il-Meñgana.	'L-Aitayok, 'Siria (the designs ?), Il-Marumae (the priers), Il-Makuperia (the flesh on the ribs).
Il-Mokesen.	Il-Mokesen-aate, Il-Partalale (the long-sighted ones), Il-Tarōsero, Il-Kiporon (the scars ?) ² , Il-Tanap-ōwaru (the lion-killers).
Il-Mōlelyan.	Il-Mōlelyan-aate, Il-Mamasita, Il-Pojos, Il-Kipuyōni, Il-Moshōno, Il-Masañgua, Il-Mokorere.

Whenever representatives of the four clans take part in a raid, it is usual to refer to the Aiser and Meñgana clans as 'L-oodo-kīshu (the blood-red cattle), and the Mokesen and Mōlelyan clans as 'L-oorook-kīshu (the black cattle).

Districts.	Sub-Districts.

When the next circumcision festivals are held, those circumcised belong to what is called the left-hand circumcision, and that is the next age. The younger ones wait as before, and when they are circumcised they likewise join this age.

Now, two ages are considered equivalent to one generation.

Each age has three divisions, first, those known as 'The big ostrich feathers,' secondly, those called 'The helpers,' and thirdly, those known as 'Our fleet runners' ¹.

² Lenana and Sendeyo (vide note on p. 328) belong to this age. Shortly after it commenced the great cattle plague broke out (1890).

³ In Taveta the corresponding age, 'Sēure, was commenced on May 7, 1897, a few months after it had been started in Masailand. Each Taveta age covers a period of about fifteen years, i. e. there is no left-hand circumcision. Vide The Journal of the African Society, No. 1, October, 1901.

When one hears the thunder crashing in the heavens it is the red god who is trying to come to the earth to kill human beings; and when one hears the distant rumbling, it is the black god who is saying: 'Leave them alone, do not kill them.'

A devil.

There is a thing which is called a devil. It was formerly a lion, but it changed itself, and one half became a man while the other half became a stone.

This devil can alter its appearance, and is sometimes to be seen one half a lion and the other half a man.

It lives in a forest and is particularly fond of the tree called e-silalei ² owing to the denseness of its growth.

It only eats human flesh and will not touch wild animals.

When people pass the spot where the devil is, it calls to them, and says: 'Come, my brother, help me lift this load of firewood.'

If anybody complies with its request, he is struck with the devil's stake, and the devil cries out to him: 'I belong to the Aiser clan, escape from me if you can.'

¹ Lit. the-of-the-stake. Kräpf (Vocabulary of the Engutuk Eloikop, p. 9) also mentions this belief in a devil, and says that the word refers to a pointed stick.

The beginner of the earth.

We were told by the elders that when God came to prepare the world he found three things in the land, a Dorobo², an elephant³, and a serpent, all of whom lived together.

After a time the Dorobo obtained a cow.

One day the Dorobo said to the serpent: 'Friend, why does my body always itch so that I have to scratch whenever you blow on me?'

The serpent replied: 'Oh, my father, I do not blow my bad breath on you on purpose.'

At this the Dorobo remained silent, but that same evening he picked up his club, and struck the serpent on the head, and killed it.

On the morrow the elephant asked the Dorobo where the thin one was.

The Dorobo replied that he did not know, but the elephant was aware that he had killed it and that he refused to admit his guilt.

During the night it rained heavily, and the Dorobo was able to take his cow to graze, and he watered it at the puddles of rain.

They remained there many days, and at length the elephant gave birth to a young one.

After a time all the puddles became dry except in one place.

Now the elephant used to go and eat grass, and when she had had enough to eat, she would return to drink at the puddle, lying down in the water and stirring it up so that when the Dorobo drove his cow to water he found it muddy.

One day the Dorobo made an arrow, and shot the elephant, and killed it.

The young elephant then went to another country. 'The Dorobo is bad,' it said, 'I will not stop with him any longer. He first of all killed the snake and now he has killed mother. I will go away and not live with him again.'

On its arrival at another country the young elephant met a Masai, who asked it where it came from.

The Masai inquired: 'Is it true that there is a Dorobo there who has killed your mother and the serpent?'

When he had received a reply in the affirmative, he said: 'Let us go there. I should like to see him.'

They went and found the Dorobo's hut, which God had turned upside down, and the door of which looked towards the sky.

God then called the Dorobo and said to him: 'I wish you to come to-morrow morning for I have something to tell you.'

The Masai heard this, and in the morning he went and said to God: 'I have come.' God told him to take an axe, and to build a big kraal in three days. When it was ready, he was to go and search for a thin calf, which he would find in the forest. This he was to bring to the kraal and slaughter. The meat was to be tied up in the hide and not to be eaten. The hide was to be fastened outside the door of the hut, firewood was to be fetched, and a big fire lit, into which the meat was to be thrown. He was then to hide himself in the hut, and not to be startled when he heard a great noise outside resembling thunder. \\x

God then caused a strip of hide to descend from heaven, which was suspended over the calf-skin.

Cattle at once commenced to descend one by one by the strip of hide until the whole of the kraal was filled, when the animals began to press against one another, and to break down the hut where the Masai was.

The Masai was startled, and uttered an exclamation of astonishment. He then went outside the hut, and found that the strip of hide had been cut, after which no more cattle came down from heaven.

God asked him whether the cattle that were there were sufficient, 'for,'
He said, 'you will receive no more owing to your being surprised.'

The Masai then went away, and attended to the animals which had been given him.

The Dorobo lost the cattle, and has had to shoot game for his food ever since.

Nowadays, if cattle are seen in the possession of Bantu tribes, it is presumed that they have been stolen or found, and the Masai say : 'These

The beginner of the earth.

The thing which is called Naiteru-kop is a god, but not as great as the black god².

This is the story which was told us by the elders :

The Masai were formerly Dorobo, and had no cattle : it was the Dorobo who possessed the cattle.

Naiteru-kop came one day and said to a Dorobo : 'Come early tomorrow morning, I have something to tell you.'

The Dorobo replied : 'Very well,' and went to sleep.

A Masai named Le-eyo, having heard what had been said to the Dorobo, arose during the night, and waited near the spot where Naiteru-kop
was.

When it dawned he went to Naiteru-kop, who said to him : 'Who are you ?'

On Le-eyo telling him his name,
Naiteru-kop asked where the Dorobo was. Le-eyo replied that he did not know.

Naiteru-kop then dropped one end of a piece of hide from the heavens, and let cattle down one by one until the Masai told him to stop.

The Masai cattle wandered off, and as they went the cattle which belonged to the Dorobo mingled with them. The Dorobo were unable to recognize their beasts again, and they lost them.

After this the Dorobo shot away the cord by which the cattle had descended, and God moved and went far off.

When the Dorobo were left without their cattle, they had to shoot wild beasts for their food.

The story of Le-eyo's disobedience¹.

One day Naiteru-kop told Le-eyo that if a child were to die he was to say when he threw away the body:
'Man, die, and come back again;
moon, die, and remain away.'

A child died soon afterwards, but it was not one of Le-eyo's, and when he was told to throw it away, he picked it up and said to himself:
'This child is not mine; when I throw it away I shall say, "Man, die, and remain away; moon, die,
and return."'

He threw it away and spoke these words, after which he returned home.

One of his own children died next,
and when he threw it away, he said:
'Man, die, and return; moon, die,
and remain away.'

Naiteru-kop said to him: 'It is

The origin of the Masai and the Bantu people.

When Le-eyo grew old, he called his children to him and said to them: ‘My children, I am now very old, I wish to bid you good-bye.’

He then asked his elder son what he wanted out of all his wealth.

His son replied: ‘I wish something of everything upon the earth.’

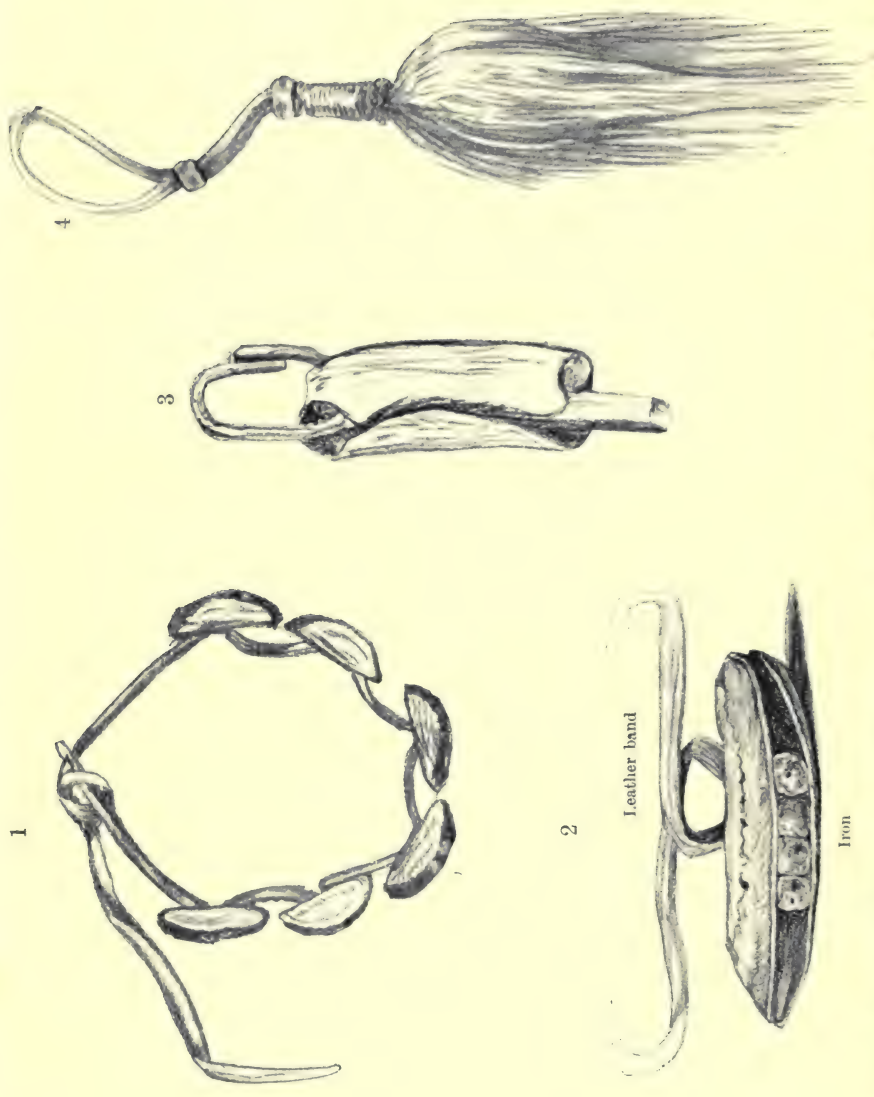

‘Since you want something of everything,’ the old man said, ‘take a few head of cattle, a few goats and sheep, and some of the food of the earth, for there will be a large number of things.’

The elder son replied: ‘Very well.’

Le-eyo then called his younger son, and asked him what he wanted.

‘I should like, Father,’ the younger one said, ‘the fan which you carry suspended from your arm.’

His father replied: ‘My child, because you have chosen this fan, God will give you wealth, and you will be great amongst your brother’s people.’

There is a cave in the mountain of smoke, or as it is otherwise called Donyo Erok, in which Masai live. If you stand near its mouth you hear the voices of people calling one another and also the lowing of cattle³.

Women go to pray at this cave, and take with them gourds full of milk and honey and butter, which they leave there. The inhabitants of the cave come during the night and eat these things.

Barren women, however, do not go to the cave as their offerings are not accepted.

If strangers who do not know about the cave cut a tree near it, blood is seen to issue from the wood.

Women's iron necklaces and ear-rings, and other matters.

The reason why women wear necklaces of iron and ear-rings (called 'surutya) is in order that it shall be known that they are married.

The Masai circumcise girls when they grow up, and these ornaments are worn to make a distinction between girls and women.

For if the women were left without the iron necklaces or the ear-rings, it could not be ascertained whether they were women or girls.

A Masai girl who has been circumcised is not called girl but woman. That is to say, she is called young woman until she gives birth to a child.

Even if she is very young, she is considered to be grown up as soon as she has been circumcised.

A woman is recognizable by three things, the ear-rings, the iron-necklace, and the big garment, none of which girls possess.

Girls wear beads, small pieces of iron wire (called 'seengani), and other trifles round their necks, and a small cloth. They also have chains in their ears, and armlets and anklets of iron.

They wear one garment and a belt round their waists similar to the warriors.

Women wear nothing round their waists except a broad belt with which they fasten their garments.

They also wear two cloths, one called ol-okesena, and the other ol-lekishopo.

Now with regard to the women's ear-rings, they are of great consequence amongst the Masai, for no woman ventures to leave them off during her husband's lifetime.

Were a woman to take off her ear-rings and hang them up while doing her work, she would run into her hut on hearing her husband approach, and put them on again, so that he should not see her without them.

If a man goes away from home, his wife does not dare to take off her ear-rings, for were the other men to see her without them, they would tell her that her husband will hate her.

The ear-rings and arm-rings of old men, and other matters.

Boys and girls put blocks of wood into their ears, called 'n-gulalen¹, and warriors and old-men wear chain ear-

No Masai elder may wear the ear-rings called 'surutya unless he has children who have been circumcised and become warriors and women; but he who has grown up children may wear 'surutya.

There is another thing, an arm-ring called ol-masangus, which is cut out of a buffalo horn or an elephant's tusk, and made to look beautiful.

No elder may wear this unless he has large herds of cattle and many children.

He who is well known to possess many head of cattle and also many children may wear this arm-ring as a sign of his wealth.

There is also an arm-clamp called e-rap, which the warriors wear, but they only put this on as an ornament².

Masai salutations.

When one warrior meets another, he says : 'Sopai'; and when several warriors meet, one party says : 'Endasopai, O warriors!' The reply to these greetings is 'Hepa.'

the people come, they are asked: 'Do

When Masai warriors meet old men, the latter start the greetings.
If there are many warriors, the old men call to them and say: 'Friends.'

To this the warriors reply: 'Yes.'

The elders then say: 'Endasopai.'

And the warriors answer all together: 'Hēpa.'

When warriors come from a distant country and see some elders outside a kraal, they go up to them, and take their hands, at the same time thrusting their spears into the earth. The elders then say to them: 'Greeting.'

When they have dropped one another's hands, the elders say to the warriors: 'Friends,' and the warriors answer: 'Yes.' The elders then give the usual salutation: 'Endasopai,' to which the warriors reply all together: 'Hēpa.'

Nowadays, however, the warriors do not wait to be greeted by the elders, and call out 'Endasopai, O called El-burgon Masai do this.

Masai greet the elders first, they say:

No warrior would dare to say to married women: 'Endakwenya, O wives!' for it would be said that he was wanting in respect.

It is only the old men who may say to their wives: 'Endakwenya, O wives!'

When married women greet warriors or boys, they say: 'Endakwenya, O children!' And the warrior or boy replies: 'Igho.'

When warriors greet married women of their own clan, they say: 'Endakwenya, O great ladies!'

To this the women reply: 'Igho.'

Warriors greet girls by saying: 'Endasopai, O girls!'

The girls reply, 'Hepa.'

The same words are spoken when girls greet warriors.

A girl does not say 'Sopai,' to her brother, nor does a warrior greet his sister in this fashion: they say 'Takwenya.' Some also kiss one another.

¹ It has been repeatedly stated that the greeting takwenya (pl. endakwenya) means laugh. Laugh is, however, strictly speaking, takwenia (pl. endakweni).

² Īghó is meaningless in Masai, but ĩgó in Bari means go away (imp.).

A warrior might, however, say
'Sopai' to his sister if she is quite

When small children or even big boys greet their elders, they do not take their hands, but they butt them people with their foreheads in the pit of the stomach.

If a woman kisses a small child, the latter touches her breast with its face. The woman then says :
'Greeting.'

Departure.

If a Masai has paid a visit to some friends, and wishes to return home, he ties up his things.

When he is ready, he says : 'Well,
I am about to go.'

The owners of the kraal reply :
'All right! Good-bye. Pray to God, accost only the things which are safe, and meet nobody but blind people.'

The guest then says : 'Lie down with honey-wine and milk,' to which the owners of the kraal reply : 'So be it.'

After this the stranger is at liberty to depart to his own country.

instance, to the Aimer age, he must not enter the hut of one of the Kishumu age, as he does not belong to this age.

He will ask where the huts of the members of the Aimer age are, and when he has been shown them, he will enter one.

When he has entered, the owner of the hut leaves him and goes to search for a place to sleep in elsewhere, the stranger remaining with his wife¹.

Or if the owner of the hut has several wives, he goes to sleep with one of these, leaving the stranger in the hut he entered.

A Masai cannot refuse hospitality to a stranger (of his own age) for he is afraid that the other members of his age will curse him, and he will die.

Cattle, grass, and milk.

The Masai love their cattle very much, and consider that nothing in the world is of equal value. As with people, each cow is known by name.

There is a saying which is as follows :

'One cow resembles a man's head.'

They mean by this that if a man

Now cattle feed on grass, and the Masai love grass on this account.

Whenever there is a drought, the women fasten grass on to their clothes, and go and offer up prayers to God.

If a warrior beats a boy on the grazing ground, the boy tears up some grass, and when the warrior sees that the child has grass in his hand, he stops beating him.

Again, if the Masai fight with an enemy, and wish to make peace, they hold out some grass as a sign.

Whenever warriors return from a raid, and it is desired to praise those who have killed some of the enemy, a girl takes a small gourd of milk, and having covered it with green grass, sprinkles it over them.

Then, if people move from one kraal to another, they tie grass on to the gourds.

Should one man ask forgiveness of another with grass in his hand and his request be not attended to, it is said that the man who refuses to listen to his prayer is a Dorobo, and that he does not know about cattle.

The brand-marks and ear-cutting of cattle, sheep, and donkeys.

The brand-marks which the Masai use for their cattle are not alike.

For each clan and family there is one principal mark, and all the cattle belonging to the various members of a family are branded in a special way.

There are also small marks by which the actual owner can be recognized.

Besides branding, each family has a special method of slitting the ears of their cattle, sheep, and donkeys.

They likewise have smaller marks for each individual owner.

If therefore a cow is seen, it can be recognized as belonging to the Aiser clan, for instance, and also to such and such a person.

Concerning the shields and spears of the Masai warriors.

The warriors' shields are not all of one design; they differ.

Each age and each sub-district has its own design.

In consequence, if the warriors meet an enemy, it is known to what age such a one belongs, and also to what sub-district.

There are four markings for the shields, the red one, the black one, the ornamental one, and the one for bravery¹.

Likewise with the spears, they are not all marked alike.

If a spear is found, it can be ascertained by looking at the lower part to what age and also to what sub-district its owner belongs.

Concerning the arrows of the Masai elders.

The old men have special marks for their arrows as the warriors have for their spears.

If an arrow is found, the generation and the sub-district to which its owner belongs can be recognized.

¹ The Masai make use of four colours in ornamenting their shields—white, red, black, and grey. White is obtained by mixing water with white clay; red clay mixed with the juice of the Solanum campylacanthum, Hochst., produces the red paint; black is procured from the ashes of Marrua uniflora, Vahl., or from charred potsherds and gourds; and grey, which is but rarely used, is obtained from cinders.

¹ Meat may not be eaten in the manyat, or warriors' kraals, and special places, called il-puli, are erected in the woods, to which the warriors retire when they slaughter cattle.

The process of moving.

The Masai are fond of moving, and if they happen to be staying in a place where the grazing is poor, they move to another spot.

When they move, they saddle their donkeys with skins and pack-saddles in which they put their gourds, and the women carry bags.

Should they stop in a place where the grass is not good, they do not build proper huts, but they live in the so-called il-ngobori, i. e. in huts made of skins. When they go to a good grazing ground, they build huts.

The women do the work of building. They procure poles, and put one end in holes, which they dig in the ground; they then bind the poles together with cord made from trees; after which they cover the framework with long grass. When they have finished this, they plaster the whole of the outside with cowdung and mud.

Masai warriors' kraals and slaughter-houses.

Masai warriors do not live in the kraals of the married people; they have their own kraals, where they dwell with their mothers and lovers.

When they go to the woods to eat meat, they live in the slaughter-houses¹ with their boy-servants.

The feast called the offspring.

There is a feast known to the Masai as The offspring.

When a child is born, and the time has arrived for it to be given a name, a bullock is slaughtered which is called The (bullock) of the offspring.

A black bullock, and one without a blemish or a white or brown spot on it, is selected, and slaughtered.

The meat is then divided up between the women and men².

When the meat has been cooked and is nearly ready, one woman stands up and calls the others. She cries out as follows: 'The honey is ready, this is for the first time; the honey is ready, this is for the second time; the meat is ready, this is for the first time; the meat is ready, this is for the second time.'

The women of the kraal then carry milk to the child's mother, and after each has been given her share of the meat, they take their departure.

In the evening the mother carries her child to the cattle kraal, and milks the cows with the child on her back.

When she has finished, three old men and the child's father (which makes four) join her, and the child is named.

The so-called offspring bullock is always slaughtered at the door of

Now the offspring bullock is not of necessity slaughtered when the child is born; it is permissible to wait until he is big and until he is about to be circumcised. No person is circumcised, however, until this bullock has been slaughtered.

The circumcision.

The following is a Masai custom :

A Masai child cannot be circumcised until the father has observed a custom called The passing of the fence.

The man who wishes to have his eldest child circumcised brews some honey-wine, and calls his neighbours together while it is being prepared.

A hut is then built for him outside the kraal, and he stays there for four days alone. He also sleeps there, and his food is taken to him.

During these four days he only approaches the kraal to look after his cattle when they are grazing outside.

He must don the clothes, ornaments, and weapons of a warrior—the sword, the spear, the club, and the shield, the cap made from the

When the four days have elapsed, some of the elders go and bring him back to the kraal.

He has to stand by the door of the hut where the honey-wine, which has previously been prepared,
is kept.

One elder then says to him who is passing the fence: 'Go, become an old-man.'

The latter replies: 'Ho! I shall not . . . !'

The order is repeated, but he still refuses.

On being told for the fifth time, he says: 'Ho! I have gone then.'

He then enters the hut and puts aside the warrior's paraphernalia;
the honey-wine is drunk; and he is called by his son's name, thus: The father of so-and-so.

When he replies to this name, he is told to go and make a profit.

He answers: 'Herds and flocks.'

This is repeated four times, and the ceremony is over.

¹ Sometimes instead of the ostrich feather head-dress one made of lion's or leopard's skin is worn, and occasionally the head-dress called ol-marangash is substituted. This head-dress is worn by the warriors when they slaughter cattle in the woods.

³ The circumcision of the Masai has been described in Thomson's Through Masailand, in Johnston's The Uganda Protectorate, and in The Journal of the Anthropological Society for Great Britain and Ireland, June, 1904 (Bagge).

the ceremony is started by his being shaved, after which a sheep or bullock is slaughtered, which is called The (animal) that has caused him to be taken out (from the boys' ranks).

On the second day the boy sallies forth to cut a tree called El-latim¹, which is carried by girls to the kraal, where it is planted at the door of the hut.

The next morning the boy goes and sits down outside the kraal to get cold. He also washes himself with water in which a fern called Father's spear² has been soaked.

When the sun is some way above the horizon, his mother opens the gate of the kraal, and fetches an ox-hide which she puts on the ground by the right-hand door-post.

The boy then takes his place on the hide, and the operator, a Dorobo, comes together with the men whose duty it is to hold the boy.

The man who holds him straightens out his legs, and the boy sits between them and is circumcised³.

If the boy winces during the operation, his mother is beaten with sticks; and if the boy's parents know that he will behave like a coward, they go away and hide themselves.

They also shoot small birds¹, which they wear round their heads together

The Sipolio like to appear as

When they have all recovered, they are shaved again and become then discard the long garments and wear warriors' skins and ornaments.

After this their hair is allowed to

If the chief medicine-man approves of the selection, a cloth is made for the new chief like those worn by the old men, and surutya ear-rings are obtained.

Just before the feast a small kraal, called O-singira, is built a short distance from the warriors' kraal.

Only milch cows are placed in this kraal.

On the day of the feast the chief is seized, for if he were told that he is to be chosen, he would run away and hide, or kill some one. The idea of becoming an old man is distasteful to him, since he will be unable to again go to the wars.

When he has been seized, the surutya ear-rings are put on him, and he is clothed like an old man. After this the work for the day is over.

On the morrow a black bullock with a white neck and belly is sought out from the herds, and surrounded by the warriors.

When the cattle go to the grazing ground, a strong man is chosen, who holds the bullock by the horn at arm's length, whilst another one seizes it by the navel.

The bullock is stabbed in the nape of the neck¹, and skinned on the spot.

The old men then light a big fire in the centre of the warriors' kraal, and throw a buffalo horn into it.

¹ All the Nilotic tribes butcher their cattle by stabbing them in the nape of the neck (Schweinfurth, The Heart of Africa, vol. i, p. 60).

Marriage¹.

When a Masai wishes to marry, he commences his courtship by making love to a girl while she is still young, and by presenting some tobacco to her father.

He then waits until the girl grows up, when he again offers presents of honey and tobacco.

More honey is given to the father at his daughter's circumcision.

On the young woman's recovery the man proceeds to his future father-in-law's kraal, and takes with him the dowry, viz. three heifers and two bullocks, one of the latter being said to keep the heifers company, whilst the other is slaughtered at the door of the hut. His sister also takes a pot of honey and accompanies him.

The bullock which accompanies the heifers is given to the bride's father in order that the two men may call one another Pakiteng, i. e. the giver and receiver of a bullock, or father and son-in-law.

When the time arrives for the husband to fetch his wife, he takes with him three sheep (two rams and a young ewe). The ewe he presents to the mother to enable them to call one another Pakerr, i. e. the giver and receiver of a sheep, or mother and son-in-law.

The two rams are slaughtered together with two others, which the girl's father provides.

¹ Formerly no Masai was able to marry until he had been on several raids, but nowadays they leave the ranks of the warriors (il-muran) and settle down as married men (il-móruak) at a comparatively early age.

After the bride's wedding-garments have been oiled, she puts them on, and is given a gourd which has been ornamented with cowries. This is put on her back, and she is taken by her husband, who is accompanied by two of his friends and two of the old women from his bride's kraal, to her future home.

She does not hurry but walks very slowly until she reaches her husband's kraal, where a child is given her to feed.

When a man marries, it is considered unlucky if he calls his wife by her name. He must give her another name. A favourite method is to call her by the age to which she belongs, thus, The (woman) of the Seure age.

If a Masai owns large herds of cattle he is able to marry many wives. Some have two wives, others three, and others four; whilst if rich men wish, they may have as many as ten or twenty.

When a Masai marries for the second or third time, his first wife gives the new wife a calf, after which they call one another Paashe, i. e. the giver and receiver of a calf.

No Masai may marry a woman belonging to the same sub-division as himself if both families live in the same district, but he may marry a woman of his own clan or one belonging to another clan.

The refuge¹.

If the Masai men beat their wives, some go and seek refuge elsewhere, whilst others suffer and stop at home.

Should a husband beat his wife, but not badly, she will seek refuge in the house of a member of her husband's age.

When the man with whom she has taken refuge returns her to her owner, the latter does not beat her again, for he fears that he will be cursed by the members of his age.

If a woman commits a serious crime, and knows that she will be beaten in consequence, she goes to her father's kraal, and is given an ox, which she takes to her husband and begs forgiveness.

Death.

On the death of a child, or a warrior, or a woman amongst the Masai, the body is thrown away², and the person's name is buried, i. e. it is never again mentioned by the family.

Should there be anything which is called by that name, it is given another name which is not like that of the deceased.

For instance, if an unimportant person called Ol-onana (he who is soft, or weak, or gentle) were to die,

² The body is always taken to the west of the kraal, towards the setting sun. It is laid on the left side with the head towards the north, so that the face looks towards the east. The legs are drawn up to the chest, the left hand supports the head, and the right arm is folded across the breast.

And if anybody of that kraal were to ask for news of the great medicine-man Ol-onana¹, he would call him
Ol-opolpol.

If an elder dies leaving children, his name is not buried, for his descendants are named after him.

When old men or women die, they are not wept for, nor are they thrown away like others who die young.

New sandals are made, a sheep is slaughtered, the fat is roasted, and the body anointed.

After this the corpse is carried to a shady place, where a bullock is slaughtered, and all the meat is eaten on the spot. The bones of the bullock are left with the body so that the hyenas may smell it, and come and carry it away, and devour it.

On the death of a Masai medicine-man or rich person the corpse is not thrown away. An ox or a sheep is slaughtered, and the fat is taken and rubbed on the body, after which it is put in an ox-hide and carried to a shady spot. A small hole is then dug resembling a trench, into which the body is laid and covered with stones. This is called a grave.

If a Masai woman gives birth to a boy after the death of one of her sons, a small piece is cut off the ear of the newly-born babe and he is called Nawayaya, i. e. from whom it has been snatched.

When the child grows up his name is changed to Ol-owara, which has the same meaning.

Sometimes children's ears are not cut, in which case they wear a special kind of bracelet, called En-daret, and a ring on one of their toes¹.

Mourning.

When a father of a family dies, the whole family mourns for him.

His widows lay aside their earrings, necklaces, and beads; his daughters leave off their chains, beads, armlets, and anklets; and his warrior sons and boys shave their heads.

His wives wait for a whole year before they put on their ornaments again.

If any other person dies, the women of the family leave off their small neck ornaments but not the iron rings or the ear-rings, and the men shave their heads. The mourning lasts for one month.

The Tarosero family have their own particular snakes, which are of many hues; and when a member of this family fights with some one and gets the worst of the combat, he calls upon his snakes, and says: 'The avengers of my mother's house, come out!' If the man with whom he is fighting does not run away, the snakes will come and bite him.

The other clans and families have their sacred snakes as well. Some are white in colour, others red, and others green. Some have a hood like an old-man's cloak, others again have white heads like very old people.

The medicine-men are also said to have snakes, which they keep in their bags.

It is believed that the souls of some big people like Mbatian¹ go to heaven after death and burial.

A sleeping man must not be awakened suddenly. He must be roused gently, for it is thought that his soul may perhaps not return and he will die.

The Masai say there are no such things as ghosts because they do not see them. But it is supposed that cattle see them, and when a herd of cattle all gaze at one spot, they are said to be looking at either a ghost or a beast of prey.

¹ The Masai distribute their herds and flocks amongst their wives during their lifetime, each one being given a certain number to look after and milk. The cattle so distributed are said to belong to the wife's family, and are recognized as the property of her sons, who, however, do not assume ownership until after their father's death.

² In a case of this kind, the child does not go to the wars, but marries soon after he is circumcised.

Inheritance.

When the father of a family dies, his eldest son inherits all his property¹, and also the herds and flocks belonging to the childless widows, but not those which are the property of widows who have sons.

The sons by each wife inherit the cattle belonging to their mother's family.

If a man dies childless, his brothers inherit his cattle and his half-brothers his wives. It is unlawful for a man's own brothers (i. e. brothers by the same mother) to take his wives.

Should a widow have a son by her late husband's half-brother or by another man, the child is given the cattle which he would otherwise have inherited had his mother's former husband been alive, and he is considered to belong to that family.

If a man dies and leaves a son who is a minor, the property which he inherits is taken care of for him until he grows up².

It is considered unlawful for a man to inherit the property of his maternal uncle.

Crimes: Theft.

If a Masai steals milk, or meat, or other small things, he is not fined.

Grown up people, however, rarely steal, it is the boys who take the milk and meat, &c.

Whilst the Masai do not consider it wrong to steal trifles of this nature, they dislike immensely having their cattle stolen.

Should any warriors steal an ox and be caught by the owner, they would have to pay; and if three men took part in the theft, each would have to pay three heifers.

In the event of the owner following up the thieves and catching them in the act of slaughtering the stolen animal, one of the warriors might see him and call out 'Guilty,' in which case he would not be fined heavily. Whilst the others would be fined in heifers, he who had cried 'Guilty' would only have to pay a young bull. Were all of them to cry 'Guilty,' they would all be fined in young bulls.

A child not born in wedlock is called The child of seduction or The child of the fireplace.

Murder.

If a Masai warrior strikes another and kills him, he runs away and hides himself.

Should there be no judges, the brothers of the murdered man will kill the murderer.

If the latter is not killed, the elders make peace between the two families, and garments are exchanged. The family of the murdered man takes the murderer's garment, and the latter takes the garment of one of the dead man's brothers.

The murdered man's brothers then wait for two years, at the expiration of which they call together all their clan, and go and lift the murderer's cattle, taking them as they would in a raid.

If there is a cow in the herd with a bell tied round its neck, it is left behind.

Masai until two years have elapsed, for they say that the dead man's head is still fresh¹.

When one Masai kills another, it is called committing murder, it is not called killing. Killing is only used when referring to savages.

If a warrior strikes another and tears the lobe of his ear, he has to pay a young ewe. If he breaks a bone, either in his leg, arm, or head, he has to pay a heifer.

If a boy is murdered, the amount which has to be paid is not as great as for a warrior, the price being fifty young bulls.

Adultery.

No warrior or boy may commit adultery with a woman of his father's age. If he does so, and it becomes known, he is cursed.

Should he be cursed, he pays two oxen (one in lieu of honey-wine), and he prays the elders to remove the curse. The elders eat the ox when they drink their honey-wine.

But this is not the case if a man commits adultery or fornication with a woman or girl of his own age. This is not an offence².

¹ This law is not always put into force. The murdered man's relations are often willing to make peace on payment of a heavy fine, say 100 head of cattle.

? ² From this it will be seen that the Masai are polyandrous as well as polygamous. A man may marry as many wives as he can afford to purchase, and a woman may cohabit with any man belonging to her husband's age.

If an old man commits adultery with his daughter or with a girl of her age, it is considered a serious crime. The other old men if they hear of it beat him, pull down his kraal, and slaughter whichever of his cattle they want.

The extraction of teeth.

There is something called em-bwata, which means the extracting of the two middle incisors of the lower jaw.

A knife is used with which to perform the operation.

The Masai extract their children's two middle teeth twice. They extract them first of all when the child is about eight months old, and all its teeth have grown. Then they wait.

After the child has lost all its milk teeth and obtained the permanent set, i. e. when it is about twelve years old, the teeth are extracted a second time, and never grow again.

When a child has had its teeth extracted, donkey's dung is put on its face in order to cool it.

The origin of this custom of extracting teeth was to enable people, in the event of a man falling ill or being on the point of death, when his teeth would pain him, to pour water through the orifice¹.

¹ Hinde (The Last of the Masai, p. 42) writes: 'The origin of this custom is supposed to date back to a time when tetanus was a great scourge amongst the Masai, and they discovered that it was a comparatively simple matter to feed a man suffering from lockjaw if two of his front teeth were missing.'

Shaving.

Masai elders, women¹, and children shave their heads and eyebrows, and pull out their eyelashes if they enter their eyes.

They also pull out or shave the hairs of the beard, armpits, and pubes, and some singe the hairs of their shins.

If warriors are not in mourning², they may not shave their heads until they have held the feast called e-unoto³, and they grow pigtails.

When a woman gives birth to a child, neither she nor the child are shaved until the latter has four

Sir H. Johnston, in commenting upon this, says (The Uganda Protectorate, p. 803): 'It may be this explanation has been invented recently to explain a very ancient custom inherited by the Masai from the Nilotic stock, which was their origin; for amongst these people the removal of the lower incisor teeth is a very common practice.' Hinde's explanation, however, appears to be very widely spread.

¹ This very uncommon practice for women to shave their heads is also followed by the Dinkas, Baris, and Latukas (Cummins, 'Sub-Tribes of the Bahr-el-Ghazal Dinkas,' Journal of the Anthropological Institute, June, 1904; and Baker, The Albert Nyanza, p. 90, &c.).

Spitting.

The Masai have two ways of spitting; one is used to show contempt, and the other astonishment.
Besides this the medicine-men spit when they wish to heal people¹.

If a Masai wishes to show his contempt for another man, he ex-pectorates a small stream of saliva forcibly through the hole in his teeth into the man's face, and says at the same time: 'You are a dog.'

Formerly when the Masai saw Swahilis, they used to spit on the ground and say: 'These coast people stink like fowls.' They never went near them or touched them if they could help it.

When a Masai sees a baby that he has never seen before, he spits on it slightly several times and says:
'Grow, become accustomed to the eyes of people.'

When he sees a child that he has never before beheld, he also spits on it slightly, and says: 'This child is bad.' To himself, however, he says:
'This child is good.' It is believed that if he praises a child it will fall ill.

¹ Amongst the Dinkas it is also customary for the medicine-men to spit on their patients (Kaufmann, Schilderungen, p. 128).

If small children salute very old men¹, the latter spit on them, and say: 'May God give you long life and grey hairs like mine².'

Then, when warriors greet old men³, the latter frequently spit in their hands before allowing the young men to grasp them.

If a Masai sees something phenomenal, such as a shooting star, he spits several times and says: 'Be lost! go in the direction of the enemy!' after which he says: 'Stay away from me.'

Again, should he forget, and call somebody who is dead, or mention the name of a deceased person, he spits. Should he hear any bad news, such as the death of some person, he spits, and says: 'Be lost, O God, we have no ears.'

When the Europeans came to these countries and the Masai saw them for the first time, they used to spit, for they said: 'We have never seen people like these.' They also called them medicine-men, and if a European gave a Masai medicine, the latter asked him to spit on him to heal him. Europeans were formerly called 'L-Ojuju owing to their being hairy.

² It is customary amongst the Bari people for old men (fathers or grand-fathers) to take children's heads between their knees and spit slightly on them to bless them (Mittertutzner, Die Sprache der Bari, p. xvi).

Food.

Amongst the Masai the principal food of the old men, the women, and the children is milk.

The warriors alone drive bullocks into the forest, and slaughter them there : at other times they go to the married people's kraals and drink milk, but they never remain for two months together without slaughtering.

Whenever the old men, the women, and the boys are able to do so, they likewise eat meat. They also eat an ox if it dies a natural death¹, or if it is bitten by a snake, or if a beast of prey has killed it.

The Masai elders, however, do not slaughter their cattle without good cause, and a man who is very fond of meat is called a Dorobo.

Whenever a woman gives birth to a child, a bullock is slaughtered, and she is given the fat.

A pregnant woman is not given good food. When she wants meat, she is given bones or lean scraps ; and when she wants milk, water is mixed with it.

The Masai are also very fond of blood. They tie a leather ligature round the neck of a beast and pierce a vein with an arrow, the shaft of which has been blocked. When the blood gushes forth, they catch it in gourds. Some drink it pure ; others mix it with milk ¹.

There are a few other things which the Masai eat.

Some old men and women chew tobacco mixed with salt and Ocimum suave, whilst others sniff ground tobacco up their nostrils : this latter is called snuff. Others again smoke pipes.

Those of the warriors who like it also take snuff. The boys and girls, however, neither take snuff nor chew tobacco ².

The Masai do not grow tobacco themselves, for they do not know how to dig. They buy it from savages, exchanging it for butter and lean goats.

The Masai do not sell good cattle to the savages ; they only give them barren cows, or those which have no milk, or which do not care for their calves. These and old or lean goats and sheep are the only animals they part with.

The old men drink honey-wine, and they purchase from the savages two kinds of beer, called Ol-marua and En-joi.

It is only the children who like wild honey : old men eat the comb full of grubs ³.

² The northern Masai sometimes use o-singir (pl. i-singiri) for a fish. The southern invariably use o-singiri (pl. i-singir).

Children are very fond of various kinds of fruit, which are also eaten by the old people, but the latter do not care for them very much.

Formerly the Masai, when they had plenty of cattle, ate no other kind of food, but nowadays they often have to eat savages' food, such as maize, rice, bananas, and cereals, for they no longer own the vast herds which they formerly possessed¹.

They, however, do not eat everything. They eat neither birds, nor fish, nor the flesh of wild animals.

Wild animals.

The Masai ate the flesh of no wild animals when in olden days they all had cattle ; but some of those who have lost all their cattle are now beginning to eat venison, like the Dorobo.

If Masai boys kill elephants, they only take the tusks, which they exchange for cattle.

When buffaloes are killed, the hide and the horns are kept. From the former the warriors make their shields, and from the latter mortars are cut in which medicines are ground. The medicine-men also use the horns to put stones in for their prophecies.

Should an eland be killed, strips of the hide are taken and made into thongs for fastening the cattle with.

When an ostrich is killed, the feathers are made into head-dresses, which are worn by the warriors when they go to war. Boys also wear ostrich feathers when they are circumcised.

Whenever a lion is killed, the hide is taken, and the warriors make a head-dress out of the mane. They wear this when they go to war.

If a wildebeest is killed, the tail is kept, and the elders make their fans from it.

Should a greater kudu be killed, the horns are preserved and blown when people move their kraals, so that nobody shall lose the way.

Lastly, if a rhinoceros is killed, its horn is taken and carved into clubs, which are used for beating the he-goats and bulls with. The counsellors' clubs are also made of rhinoceros horn.

These are the wild animals of which the Masai make use.

A Masai will also kill a beast of prey if he sees it eating cattle or goats, for he says: 'It has eaten our cattle.' The beasts of prey which eat cattle and goats are lions, leopards, hyenas, and jackals.

Games.

Small Masai children collect pebbles or berries, with which they play at cattle and sheep. They also build huts and kraals in the sand, and they make spears out of bulrushes. Little girls make dolls of the fruit of the sausage-tree².

Big boys play about in the herds of cattle. They choose a quiet animal, and pretend it is a hut. One boy stands by the cow whilst the others go and hide. When the latter return, the one who is standing by the cow chases them away. If one of the boys who is driven off is caught, they say the enemy have killed him; anybody who manages to escape and touch the cow has won. This game is called Sambwen.

The old men likewise have their game. This is played on a board containing many compartments, in which they circulate pebbles called 'n-doto. This game is called en-geshei.

The warriors also play this game, but they do not care about it much. They have no boards, and make holes in the earth.

They then meet together at a certain spot, everybody present holding grass in his right hand, and exchange the cattle, the Masai taking the enemy's cow and the enemy the Masais'. The enemy's child is suckled at the breast of the Masai woman, and the Masai baby at the breast of the woman belonging to the enemy.

After this they return to their kraals, knowing that a solemn peace has been entered into.

Thus was peace restored between the Lumbwa Masai and the Masai proper¹, in the year of the sun², at the place called the Ford of Sangaruna³.

Formerly when the Masai did not wish to make a solemn peace with the savages, they entered into blood brotherhood with them.

A Masai elder would sit down with one of the elders of the savages; each of them would then cut his left arm, and after dipping in the blood some meat of a bullock which was killed on the spot, would eat it.

When they had finished, the Masai went away, but they did not keep the peace.

¹ Hopley (Eastern Uganda, p. 42) and Johnston (The Uganda Protectorate, p. 884) describe a similar ceremony after a war between the Masai and the Lumbwa or Kip-sikisi.

The Masai believe in what they term Il-tiloi, or omens.

If a man goes to visit a woman who is ill, and the bird which is called Ol-tilo¹, on account of its note, cries on his left hand, he knows that the woman is very ill indeed. Should the bird utter its cry on his right hand, he knows that the woman is on a fair way to recovery.

The medicine-men.

Medicine-men have four methods of divining future events.

The first is by means of a buffalo or ox horn. A handful of stones¹ is thrown in, and they know what is going to happen by the number which fall out when the horn is shaken.

The second is by examining the entrails of a goat which they slaughter. From what they see there they are able to predict that certain things will come to pass, such as epidemics, &c.

The third method is when they drink honey-wine and get drunk. They are then able to prophesy what will take place.

The fourth method is by dreams. They tell people what they saw in their dreams, and it is believed to be a prophecy. Should the dream not come true after an interval of some years, people cannot say it is not correct: they must wait until the medicine-man tells them that the event is about to happen.

If the medicine-man is going to prophesy by means of the buffalo or ox horn, and there are people on the road, he tells those present that he will wait, as their feet will spoil his prophecy. They always know when people are coming, even if they are afar off.

When a medicine-man makes medicine, he gets drunk before he prophesies. He sings in parables, and the people reply.

For instance, when the medicine-man named The father of Ngupe made medicine for the warriors of Kilepo before they went on a raiding expedition, he sang:

'The bulls that cannot move because they are so fat,
They will be beaten by Kilepo.
The bulls that cannot move because they are so fat,

Half of them have been captured.'

The warriors of Kilepo went on their projected raid against the people of Kahe¹, and captured half of their cattle.

They said: 'Thus prophesied the medicine-man.'

All medicine-men belong to the Kidongi family of the Aiser clan, and they are the descendants of Ol-Oimooja or of E-Sigiriaishi², the sons of Ol-le-Mweiya³.

Of all the medicine-men Lenana is the greatest. All Masai acknowledge him as their lord and pay tribute to him.

It is said that Lenana is the son of Mbatian, who was the son of Supeet, who was the son of Sitonik, who was the son of Kipepete, who was the son of Parinyombe, who was the son of Kidongoi, who was the son of E-Sigiriaishi, the son of Ol-le-Mweiya.

The story of the origin of the medicine-men is said to be as follows: Ol-le-Mweiya came down from heaven and was found by the Aiser clan sitting on the top of their mountain¹. He was such a small person that he was first of all believed to be a child. He was taken by the Aiser clan to their kraal, where it was discovered that he was a medicine-man. He married and had issue.

When he was dying he said to his children: 'Do not move from this spot.' On account of this the Aiser clan do not go far from their mountain.

Now, of all the medicine-men who lived in olden days Mbatian was the greatest.

It is said that formerly, before Europeans ever came to these countries, he prophesied that white people would arrive.

Again, before he died he told

¹ Commonly known to Europeans as Ngong or Donyo Lamuyu. The Masai have three names for this mountain—Eng-oŋgu e-'m-bagasi (the eye or source of the Athi River), Ol-doinyo loo-'l-Aiser, and Ol-doinyo lo-'l-le-Mweiya.

the people to move their grazing grounds, 'for,' he said, 'all the cattle will die. You will first of all see flies which make hives like bees, then the wild beasts will die, and afterwards the cattle.'

Both of these prophecies have come true: the Europeans have arrived, and the cattle died.

Mbatian himself died while the cattle plague was raging (circa 1890).

When on the point of death, he called the elders of Matapato, the sub-district in which he lived, and said to them: 'Do not move from your country for I am about to die, and I will send you cattle from heaven. If you move, you will die of small-pox, your cattle will all perish, you will have to fight with a powerful enemy, and you will be beaten. I wish my successor to be the son to whom I give the medicine-man's insignia. Obey him.'

The elders said: 'Very well,' and left.

When they had gone, Mbatian called his eldest son Sendeyo¹, and said to him: 'Come to-morrow morning for I wish to give you the medicine-man's insignia.'

Sendeyo replied: 'Very well,' and went to lie down.

While this was taking place, Lenana, who had hidden himself in the calf-shed, overheard the conversation. He arose early in the morning and went to his father's hut. On his arrival he said: 'Father I have come.'

¹ Lenana is sometimes said to be the eldest son of Mbatian.

Now Mbatian was very aged and he had only one eye. He therefore did not see which of his sons was before him and gave to Lenana the insignia of the medicine-man (the iron club and the medicine horn, the gourd, the stones¹, and the bag), at the same time saying: 'Thou shalt be great amongst thy brothers and amongst all the people.'

Lenana took the medicine-man's insignia and went away.

Sendeyo then went to his father, but was told that his brother had already been there and been given the medicine-man's insignia. When he heard this, he was very angry and said: 'I will not be subject to my brother; I will fight with him till I kill him.'

Mbatian died and was buried near Donyo Erok.

When he was dead, some of the people proclaimed Lenana principal medicine-man, 'for,' they said, 'Mbatian told us that he would give the insignia of his office to whichever of his sons he wished should succeed him.' They therefore remained with Lenana.

But others said: 'We will not acknowledge this man for he is a cheat,' and they threw in their lot with Sendeyo².

¹ It is possible that these stones, which according to tradition were brought many years ago from the north, may prove to be of some interest. It is asserted that no European has ever been allowed to behold them.

² This is the story as told by the Masai. The official version is that Lenana was chosen by the elders of most of the clans and districts on his father's death, but that Sendeyo refused to acknowledge him, and was supported by the 'L-oitai (i. e. the Masai of the 'L-oita sub-district, near Kilima Njaro), with whom he lived for many years. The warriors of the two parties frequently met in deadly strife, and raided each other's cattle. In 1902 Sendeyo gave up the hopeless conflict, and agreed to acknowledge his brother as chief. He now lives not far from Naivasha. Lenana himself says that he and his three brothers Sendeyo, Neliang, and Tolito were examined by their father a short time before the latter's death, and as he possessed a better knowledge of the work of the medicine-men than his brothers, he was given the iron club, &c., and chosen by the elders as Mbatian's successor.

¹ On one occasion the iron club was lost. A messenger was sent by Lenana to the Government authorities at Nairobi, and when crossing the Uganda Railway he was overtaken by a train. He jumped on one side and saved his life, but dropped the club, which was never found again. Its place was taken for some years by a small iron poker, but another club has now been made.

Now disease broke out amongst Sendeyo's people, many of whom died, their cattle all perished, and they were defeated by the Germans; whilst those people who remained with Lenana did not fall ill, and they obtained cattle, as Mbatian had predicted.

The two rivals waged war for many years, and eventually Sendeyo was beaten. He came in 1902 to beg his brother to allow him to live with him, and peace was concluded between the two parties.

Before Lenana dies he will select whichever of his sons is acquainted with the work of the medicine-men to succeed him.

The principal badge of the medicine-man's office is the iron club¹. If the medicine-man sends a messenger to tell his people anything, he also sends his club so that it may be known that the message comes from him.

Should a medicine-man strike anybody with the iron club, that

The smiths ¹.

All Masai do not know how to make spears and swords; this is the work of the smiths. It is they who make the weapons, and the others purchase from them.

The smiths use in the forge a stone, a hammer, pincers, and bellows, and they make needles, bracelets, axes, anklets, weapons, and other things.

The iron which they work with they purchase from the Swahili, or they smelt the ore which they find in the bed of the Matapato river.

Every clan has its smiths; but there is one clan, the Kipuyoni, to which most men of this class belong.

The other Masai do not marry the daughters of the smiths, for it is not considered correct. The smiths marry amongst themselves.

¹ The Kunono and Dorobo seem to hold much the same position among the Masai as the Tumulods (smiths) and Ramis (hunters) among the Somali. No free Somali enters a smithy, or shakes hands with a smith; none takes a wife from this stock, or gives his daughter to a member of it. The Tumulods are spread over the whole of Somaliland as the Kunono over Masailand, and no instance is known of them giving up the trade. Still more debased and poorer are the Ramis, who, like the Dorobo, live by hunting game. Cp. Ratzel, The History of Mankind, vol. ii, p. 494.

If a Masai takes in his hand a spear or sword or other thing which a smith has held, he first of all oils his hand for it is considered improper for him to take it in his bare hand.

The smiths are not rich in cattle like other Masai. They have no luck with cattle. If you find one possessing forty head, it is a very large number.

The smiths have their own language, which, although a corruption of Masai, is not understood by the ordinary Masai. Not all of them can speak this language: it is only a certain number of them who know it.

Earthenware pots and gourds.

Some Masai women are able to make earthenware pots; others who are unable to make them buy them from savages.

Gourds are also bought, or they are collected in the deserted kraals.

One pot¹ can be purchased for a goat.

When the Masai make pots they make them in two sizes, big and small; these pots are also provided with handles¹ by which they can be picked up.

When warriors go to the woods to slaughter cattle, they carry their cooking-pots by a strip of hide fastened to the handles².

Old men amongst the Masai make pipes of goats' bones, rhinoceros horns, or pieces of wood. They do not, however, smoke much; they prefer to take snuff or chew tobacco.

The divisions of the day¹.

The Masai have various names for the divisions of day and night.

There is day (as compared to night) and evening.

The evening is the time when the cattle return to the kraals just before the sun sets (6 p.m.).

There is also the time called Nightfall, or the hour for gossip (8 p.m.); this is the hour before people go to bed.

Then there is the night, midnight, and the time when the buffaloes go to drink—this latter is the hour before the sun rises, which the Swahili call Saa kumi (4 a.m.).

There is also the time called The blood-red period or When the sun decorates the sky: this is the hour when the first rays of the sun redden the heavens (6 a.m.).

Then there is the morning; this is after the sun has risen.

There are also the hours called The sun stands or is opposite to one (mid-day), The shadows lower themselves (1-2 p.m.), and Afternoon.

¹ The Dinka divide their day in much the same manner as the Masai (Kaufmann, Schilderungen, p. 131).

The months of plenty :

1. March. This is the month when the rains of the Pleiades commence. The clouds become black, and heavy mists hang about.

2. April. The bulls have to be tied up in the kraals to prevent their being lost.

3. May. The Pleiades set in this month.

Should the rains still continue at the beginning of June, the Masai say: 'We have forgotten, this is May;' and should the hot season not be over at the commencement of December, they say: 'We have forgotten, this is November¹.'

Yawning, hiccoughs, sneezing, and illnesses.

When the Masai yawn, they are said to be sleepy. If a small child yawns, his mother grasps his mouth between her fingers to prevent it from stretching and becoming big like the savages' mouths.

If a person has hiccoughs, it is believed that he will eat some meat.

When a person sneezes, he says to himself: 'Somebody is calling me.' If other people are present, they say to him: 'May God make your head hard,' or: 'Have good health.'

When a Masai falls ill, it is said

Trees and medicines.

There are many trees (medicines) of which the Masai make use.

The following medicines are used as purgatives :

1. Embelia kilimandscharica, Gilg. A concoction made from the bark of this so-called red tree mixed with butter. Also the berries of this tree, called The bitter things, which are chewed, or crushed and mixed with hot milk or blood.

2. The bark of Croton Elliottianus, Engl. and Pax, mixed with curdled milk.

3. Albizzia anthelminthica, A. Brongn. The bark is mixed with milk or blood or soup as a remedy for worms. This medicine is also good for nervous complaints.

4. Euphorbia polyacantha, Boiss. This plant, which has the same medicinal qualities as Albizzia anthelminthica, is cut up into small pieces and drunk in hot milk or water.

5. Commiphora sp. The bark of this tree is boiled in milk and drunk hot.

6. Euphorbia sp. Children eat this if they are unwell, for it does them no harm.

2. The roots and fruit of Solanum campylacanthum, Hochst., are mixed with hot milk and drunk.

3. Acacia albida, Delile. The bark is stripped off and boiled. The patient drinks this and vomits, after which he recovers.

4. Blood and hot milk are drunk.

5. Zanthoxylum sp. Babies are given a piece of the bark to chew as a preventive against fever, for the Masai say: 'The fever is afraid of this tree.'

The medicines used to cause vomiting:

1. Lippia sp. soaked in boiling water.

2. A goat is slaughtered and the undigested food from the intestines is taken by the patient.

3. Harrisonia abyssinica, Oliver. The roots are put into hot water which is given to the patient.

How fire is obtained.

When the Masai move and go far¹, the men take with them, or cut on the spot where they intend to stay, a hard pointed stick and a flat piece of wood. They then search for some donkey's dung or dry grass, and produce fire in the centre of the new kraal by drilling the stick into a hole in the wood. When the fire has reached the grass they set light to some leaves of Cordia ovalis and throw wood on to the fire. The women obtain their fire from the one which the men have made.

The Masai say that the hard stick is a man and the flat piece of wood his wife.

The hard sticks are cut from Ficus sycomorus and Ekebergia sp.; the flat pieces of wood from any fibrous tree, such as Kigelia africana, Cordia ovalis, or Acacia albida.

¹ When the journey is a short one the women carry fire with them.

Wounds and Surgeons.

If a Masai warrior is shot, and an arm or leg broken, the surgeons are able to mend it.

They cut through the flesh, take out the splinters and bring the edges of the bone together, after which they stitch up the wound with the sinew from the back of an ox, and bind the limb securely.

The only food that is given to a man with a broken limb is roast meat and the thirst-quenching medicine obtained from Acacia abyssinica.

Should a man be shot in the belly so that the intestines protrude, the wound is washed and the intestines returned to their place; sheep's fat (a quart or more) is poured into the wound, which is then stitched up.

Again, if a man is shot and a rib broken, the flesh is skinned from the wound, and a sheep's rib is inserted in place of the broken one. Sheep's fat is then poured into the wound, after which it is sewn up.

The wounded man is not allowed to drink milk, and may only eat meat.

If a man is shot with a poisoned arrow, a pregnant cow is slaughtered, and he is given the caul fat to drink. This causes him to vomit and he recovers.

If the surgeons see that a man's bone cannot be mended, they fasten Trial by ordeal among the Masai.

Some Masai have a trial by ordeal.

If a person is accused of having done something wrong, he drinks some blood, which is given him by the spokesman, and says : 'If I have done this deed, may God kill me.'

If he has committed the crime, he dies ; but if not, no harm befalls him.

Songs.

A prayer to God¹.

Masai women do as follows when one of their number gives birth to a child.

They collect together and take milk to the mother ; they then slaughter a sheep, which is called, The purifier of the hut, or simply The purifier.

The women slaughter the animal by themselves, and eat all the meat.

No man may approach the spot where the animal is slaughtered, for it is considered unlawful.

When the women have finished their meal, they stand up and sing the following song :

¹ Masai women often pray twice daily. Men and children usually only pray in time of drought, or when a cattle plague is raging.

Eng-Ai! eng-Ai! naōmon ai,	Solo. The God! the God! whom I pray, my,
Injooki en-dōmōno.	Give me the offspring.
Naikurukur neshā,	Who thunders and it rains,
Iye ōshi ak' aaōmon.	Chorus. Thee every day only I pray to thee.
Kileghen oilepu,	Solo. Morning star which rises hither,
Iye ōshi ak' aaōmon.	Chorus. Thee every day only I pray to thee.
Paasai leleshwa ¹ ,	Solo. He to whom I offer prayer is like sage,
Iye ōshi ak' aaōmon.	Chorus. Thee every day only I pray to thee.
Naōmoni, neniñg,	Solo. Who is prayed to, and He hears,
Iye ōshi ak' aaōmon.	Chorus. Thee every day only I pray to thee.

Free Translation.

I

My God, to thee alone I pray
That offspring may to me be given.
Thee only I invoke each day,
O morning star in highest heaven.
God of the thunder and the rain,
Give ear unto my suppliant strain.
Lord of the powers of the air,
To thee I raise my daily prayer.

II

My God, to thee alone I pray,
Whose savour is as passing sweet
As only choicest herbs display,
Thy blessing daily I entreat.
Thou hearest when I pray to thee,
And listenest in thy clemency.
Lord of the powers of the air,
To thee I raise my daily prayer.
